ARCHBISHOP TO BECOME CARDINAL IN MAY.

TO REWARD GREAT SERVICE

Signal Honor in Store for Prelate on Return from New Mission to Japan.

By C. O'Connell Galvin.

That Archbishop O'Connell will come back to Boston from Rome next Summer as Boston's first Cardinal is now regarded as settled in all the important centres of Catholic thought throughout the country. The Archbishop will leave for Japan early in January. He goes to the court of the Mikado on a diplomatic mission, supplementary to that conducted by him a few years ago, when, as Bishop of Portland, he carried on important negotiations between the Vatican and the Japanese Emperor.

The task assigned to Archbishop O'Connell is the re-establishment in Japan for Catholic schools, colleges and universities, with practically the whole Catholic missionaries working in the empire.

The Archbishop is not expected to return to Boston before June. He will be detained in Japan until April, when he will go direct to Rome to report in person to the Pope on the result of his mission.

A papal consistory will be held in May, when it is regarded as certain that at least one Cardinal's red hat will be bestowed in the United States. And it is the generally accepted belief that this is coming to Boston.

In Prime of Middle Life.

The head of the Boston archdiocese is one of the youngest prelates of the Catholic Church. Still in the prime of middle life, he has already attained the highest distinctions which the church bestows upon those of his household who prove by the fruits of their work in their respective countries and localities, as well as by their ability to propagate the faith abroad, that they are worthy of advancement to high rank in the church's prelacy.

Born in Massachusetts and prominent in his early education in Boston, Archbishop O'Connell is thoroughly imbued with every instinct of Americanism and the patriotic American. His later training in Europe gave to his mind an international broadening of view, upon to which his quick intellect actively responded. Thus equipped, he developed early in his career those qualities of statesmanship and diplomacy which have since marked him as one of the most progressive Catholic ecclesiastics of the day. Sprung from the democracy, he knows the needs, the hopes, the just claims of the great masses of his people, and so he is able to keep in close touch with their every movement, and where he feels it necessary and wise, to take his place as director and leader.

From the first moment that heavy responsibility came to him when death closed the eyes of his predecessor, the policy of Archbishop O'Connell in spiritual head of one million people of this archdiocese has been conspicuously to the best sense of that term. His public addresses on notable occasions have been powerfully influential by a sagacity joined to uncompromising aggressiveness where principle was at stake, making these speeches keynote whose echoes are still ringing in the hearts of his people.

For honor and honesty in public as in private life, for perfect probity in public service as in private management, he has stood with certain voice and commanding influence since the first days of his episcopal authority. No man or woman of the thousands who heard his ringing address before the Symphony Hall last September are likely to lose sooner from their memory the impressiveness of that scene. On moral grounds alone, and as Bishop of Boston, expressly charged with the shepherding of the people's morals, he spoke that day in burning terms upon the consequences of the acts of those who, seeking office by the hands of the people, prove recreant to their trust and reap discomfort and disgrace upon those whose representatives they sought to be.

Great Powers of Leadership.

In the field of executive activity Archbishop O'Connell has given unmistakable signs of the possession of great powers of leadership and ability to cope with new problems and conditions. His first opportunity to do this came in the early days of last year, when the acute crisis arose between the government of France and the church. Leaders of Catholic thought throughout the world called for action in defense of the position taken by the Pope as protector of the church's interests. Boston was the first to move.

Real Trains of Cars and Autos and Merry-Go-Rounds for the Heirs of Society.

New York, Dec. 19.—Finding holiday gifts for "the little brothers and sisters of the rich" is a trying task for the plutocratic Santa Claus on whose special duty it is to circulate among the nurseries of the Four Hundred.

Some of the presents which these fortunate gold-spoon youngsters will receive this year surpass the guessing qualities of the average man, not to mention his pocketbook.

For instance, Master John Nicholas Brown, "the richest boy in America," so it has been learned, wanted a merry-go-round. He will get it. A large cardboard of French design and make is being set up for Master Brown in a specially built room on his mother's place at Newport.

Vincent, the little son of John Jacob Astor, who is of a scientific turn of mind, will have for his Christmas present a chemical laboratory.

Little Miss Kathleen Vanderbilt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, will receive a Shetland pony and cart, while young William Henry, Alfred Vanderbilt's son, will get the working model of a train, such, it is said, as the old Commodore used.

Margaret Carnegie, only daughter of the Duke of Skibo, holds the record for the most expensive gift. She will get the deed to a Kilmarnock terrier in Perthshire.

JORDAN MAY FACE JURY IN JANUARY

District Attorney Expects to Demand Trial Soon.

In spite of the efforts of counsel for Chester S. Jordan of Somerville, indicted for wife-murder, to postpone his trial, District Attorney John J. Higgins of Middlesex, will probably demand that the case be tried before June, according to report.

Jordan must be put on trial by March, as the statute says a person indicted for murder shall be tried within six months of the indictment. Jordan was indicted by the September grand jury of Middlesex county.

Jordan's brother-in-law, Jesse L. Liberman, the millionaire packing pioneer of New York, has retained a formidable battery of counsel to oppose the State. He has engaged Attorney William H. Ilitt of New York, in addition to General Charles W. Bartlett, Hiram A. Pratt, Jeremiah Sullivan and Senator Richard F. Teeling of this city.

It is said that the defense wishes to put off the trial till June, because there are several dates scheduled for the trial, but in each case the Jordan case has received precedence under the plea of not being ready.

POLICEMEN GUARD EXPRESS WAGONS

Captain Cain Has Big Detail on Watch for Thieves.

Determined to put a stop to stealing packages from express wagons at department stores and the South Station, Capt. Cain of the La Grange street station had a score of policemen on duty last night watching the wagons as they were loaded and unloaded, following them when they made the run to the station. The "special force" was on duty until midnight.

The efforts of the police to break up the express thieving followed the continued trial of William H. Howard before Judge Lewis Entwistle in the Municipal Criminal Court yesterday. At a previous hearing of the case Howard was held in $1,000 bail, charged with stealing bundles. Special Officer Patrick Hart, detailed from the Expressmen's League, which is prosecuting the case, testified strongly that the bundles were not co-operating with him in his work of rounding up the thieves.

The case was continued until next week.

QUINCY MAN GETS BACK XMAS CASH

Honest Policeman Finds $320 Lying in Street.

Michael Ford, of Quincy, was last night saved an unhappy Christmas through the honesty of Policeman Bishop of the Quincy police force. The officer found $320 belonging to Ford strapped in a handkerchief and returned the money. The next day Ford, on his way to work, saw a handkerchief lying on the pavement in City Square. While in court yesterday, he heard Fred Ayer mention the loss of his money, which he said, he carried in a handkerchief. Where he got it.

Bishop then examined his find and found in the handkerchief $300 in bills and $20 in gold, which he returned to Ford. Ford paid a visit last night to Bishop's home and made him a handsome Christmas present from his money.

PRESIDENT TUTTLE ON THE PILGRIMS

Defends Them in Address Before Catholic Union.

President Lucius Tuttle of the Boston & Maine Railroad avoided transportation problems in his remarks last night at the monthly "smoke talk" of the Catholic Union of Boston. He took as his favorite subject the Causes That Led the Pilgrim Fathers to Settle at Plymouth, Mass., among other things.

"The Pilgrims were the only religious body that left their land that were persecuted, and they never persecuted anyone and they never burned anyone. They were not connected with the Boston Puritans. They were not Puritans."

Vincent Girl Clubman's Bride.

Another Vincent Club girl deserted ranks yesterday, when Miss Elizabeth Cabot, daughter of Mrs. Samuel Cabot of Commonwealth avenue, became the bride of Henry Lyman, son of Mrs. Theodore Lyman of Brookline. The wedding, which unites two of the oldest and most aristocratic families in Boston, took place at noon in the Cabot residence, No. 209 Commonwealth avenue.

"I'LL GIVE HUB BEST OPERATIC SEASON IN HISTORY," SAYS HAMMERSTEIN.

TO BRING FAMOUS STARS

Splendid Repertoire Includes New Operas With Noted Singers in Roles.

Oscar Hammerstein, the noted impresario of New York, is coming to Boston with his constellation of song-artists the last of March and will remain two weeks. He says that he knows what the music lovers of Boston are craving for, and he proposes to give it to them. In an article specially written for the Boston Sunday American Mr. Hammerstein tells Boston of his plans. This is Mr. Hammerstein's article:

By OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN.

My first season of opera in Boston will occupy the two weeks following the close of the season at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, beginning March 29th and continuing until April 10th, when will include evening performances and a Saturday matinee each week in the Boston Theatre.

I am going to give Boston the greatest operatic season in its history. I know something about Boston. There is no city in the country that has more artistic appreciation. Boston is always ready to hear and enjoy new works.

As far as opera is concerned the music loving public has been starved for many a year. I know that. I have just what Boston music lovers are craving for and I intend to give it to them in just the same style as I produce my operas at the Manhattan and Philadelphia Opera Houses.

I shall given Boston why I have been successful in New York and Philadelphia. I shall take Boston off the beaten path of the old hackneyed operas.

Splendid Repertoire.

The repertoire will include all of my novelties, among which are "Pelleas and Melisande," "The Juggler of Notre Dame," "Thais," "Louise," "Princess Daubergne," "The Tales of Hoffmann," "Samson and Delilah," "Othello," "Griselidis" and "Salome."

The company will include Mary Garden, Terrazzini, Agastinelli, Trentini, Renaud, M. Pearl, Sibella, Dalmores, Constantino, Simmaco, Dufrinne, and Crabbe.

Campanini, the most versatile of living conductors, will direct the performances.

Such an assembly of lyric artists has never been known in any one operatic company before. I can safely express an opinion on Boston as an operatic field when I see what response there is to my subscription books there."

If you want me to come again you must "show me" on this occasion.

ACTRESS MYSTERIOUSLY SHOT; ESCORTS SOUGHT

Companion Declares Dying Friend Accidently Discharged Pistol.

Chicago, Dec. 19.—Margaret Wishwell, twenty-one years old, an actress, known on the stage as Peggy Perry, is dying at Mercy Hospital from a bullet wound near the heart, as the result of a mysterious shooting in her room at No. 2,613 Indiana avenue. Miss Wishwell recently came to Chicago from Goldfield, Nev. The shooting occurred in the presence of Miss Elizabeth L. Jann, her roommate.

Miss Jann declared her companion was examining a revolver, when it was discharged. Two revolvers were found in the room by detectives who searched the premises. Search is being made for two young men who had been the girls' escorts earlier in the evening.

The Spirit of Christmas

By the REV. EDWARD A. HORTON,
Chaplain of the Massachusetts State Senate

Written Expressly for the Boston Sunday American.

Christmas is a song of peace: Let us sing it. Christmas is a star of hope: Let us follow it. Christmas is a call of brotherhood: Let us work for it.

By these words I mean that if Christmas is to be of any real heart and good it must be translated into the life of to-day.

Let us hear the angels' song, and, hearing, prove ourselves worthy listeners by becoming doers.

Let us all combat the selfish spirit that has crept in, and teach our children to think of others; to give rather than to centre all dreams by night and pleadings by day on personal gifts and pleasures.

Let us unite to stop the woes of war and bring in the happy reign of good will and international fraternity.

May we all try to make Christmas felt in every day of the New Year, opening the heart, giving sunshine to common affairs and honoring our fellow-men.

To see life in the large; to take hold of things by the right handle; to keep cheery and courageous; to look for the good and not for the bad; to hope and not to fear. —this is greatly the Spirit of Christmas.

From the cheerful firesides of our American homes may the light of liberty, justice and brotherhood go out, this Christmastide, unto the ends of the earth!

Above all, within our own borders, may the carols of children and the hymns of the church stir deep feelings of kindness, generosity and friendship among all classes of people, and make us truly a noble Republic!

AUTO REAPS DEATH HARVEST IN STATE

The Twentieth Century Club listened to the discussion of "The Inadequacy of Present Automobile Regulation," by E. A. Filene, Seth KK. Humphrey, Robert Homans, Wellington P. Kidder and Henry B. Blackwell yesterday.

Automobiles killed forty-seven persons in Massachusetts in 1907 and so far in 1908, thirty persons. Three hundred were injured in 1907 and about the same number were hur so far this year," said Mr. Filene.

The compounding of machines, whose powers transgressed the laws, was a sad question, which met with approval. That the responsibility for accidents was not falling was the view of Mr. Filene. "The present automobile laws cannot be obeyed," he said, "and automobilists do not intend to obey them. These laws were never intended to break any law, but they are breaking them, and when they begin to break one law, they establish a weakness, which will lead to the breaking of other laws."

Major Hill of Boston said, "The marine officers met here to-night for an exchange of opinion and general discussion of the order of President Roosevelt which will take the marines from the warships. The officers, in other words, wanted to discuss the matter with it under the new regulations.

NEW RULE PUZZLES MARINE OFFICERS

President's Order Discussed at Banquet in Boston.

Officers of marines of Boston, New York and Portsmouth held a banquet last night at the Puritan Club to talk over the new order of President Roosevelt which will take the marines from the warships. The officers, in other words, wanted to discuss the matter with it under the new regulations.

Major Hill of Boston said, "The marine officers met here to-night for an exchange of opinion and general discussion of the order of President Roosevelt which will take the marines from the warships. The officers, in other words, wanted to discuss the matter with it under the new regulations.

One of the marines over in the Charlestown Navy Yard said, "If the Marine Corps is taken from the ships, good bye smokie, the animal stoke free and leaped to the street and died.

There are a suite of rooms at the private boarding house of Mrs. Edwin Bailey on Main street in Malden. Miss Bailey though heard a cat mewing outside the front door and went out on the walk its ears burned away.

The moment she opened the door she saw a big Maltese, scared and scarred and with its ears partly burned away. She didn't know Tabby but he did her, for the moment he saw her he went through the reticks the family pet had well learned. That was enough. With a glad cry the young woman took the cat into her arms and rushed with it to her mother.

PEARL NECKLACE FOR MISS GORDON

Boston Theatre Stock Company Has a Rousing Farewell.

Worth of the historic old playhouse in which they were enacted, were the scenes attending the farewell performances of the Boston Theatre Stock Company, in which the stage favorites and nearly 3,000 spectators took part last night in the Boston Theatre. Beautiful gifts were given to Margaret Gordon and Wilson Melrose, the leading woman and leading man. Every part and every inch of standing room from pit to gallery was occupied.

From the moment that the curtain rose on the initial scene in the first act of "The Waits of Broadway," Miss Gordon and Wilson Melrose, together with the score of other members of the company that have been identified with the house, was in a perfect uproar of applause.

The climax came after the third act, when the curtain rose. Every member of the company was on the stage. Miss Gordon made the recipient of scores of bouquets and floral pieces, while Miss Melrose, on the other side of the footlights, George Parker, in behalf of the large admirers, presented Eleanor Gordon with a beautiful pearl, diamond studded rope necklace.

Then Wilson Melrose was brought to the front of the stage and presented with a magnificent silver loving cup.

Then, one by one, the members of the company came to the front of the stage with their arms just full of flowers and acknowledged their appreciation of the demonstration and responded to brief speeches. Speeches were made by Wilson Melrose, Frank Losee, Gertrude Bondy, Mary Sanders, Walter Walker, Henry Edwards, Rose Morison, George Parker, Dudley Hawley, Beverly West, Georgetta De Farge, Carlotta Hine, William Hassan, Arthur Thompson and Arthur Boardman.

Cat, Flame-Scarred in Chelsea Fire, Tracks Family to New Home

"And the cat came back."

Mr. and Mrs. George Clough and their daughter Emily, who lived on Bellingham Hill, Chelsea, until their home was burned by the great fire last April, are as happy to-day as though a large part of their household goods were not, for a big Maltese cat is home not for years, which fled the day of the fire, has come back to them after an absence of more than nine months.

Tabby found his loved ones at their present home in Malden, No. 145 Clifton street, and, according to the woman of the house, identified himself by performing the tricks he had learned so well long ago.

When the home of the Cloughs was seen to be doomed the family fled and a house maid was carrying the Maltese down the front steps, when terrorized by the fire and smoke, the animal broke free and leaped to the street and fled.

The Cloughs got a suite of rooms at the private boarding house of Mrs. Edwin Bailey on Main street in Malden. Miss Bailey though heard a cat mewing outside the front door and went out on the walk its ears burned away.

The moment she opened the door she saw a big Maltese, scared and scarred and with its ears partly burned away. She didn't know Tabby but he did her, for the moment he saw her he went through the reticks the family pet had well learned. That was enough. With a glad cry the young woman took the cat into her arms and rushed with it to her mother.

BIG SOUTH BOSTON TANNERY BURNED

Ladder Truck Wrecked in Race to Fire—One Rescue, Two Runaways.

After a fierce fight last night firemen brought under control a three-alarm fire which burned out the big three-story wooden tannery of the Morocco Leather Company at the corner of Dorchester avenue and Dorchester street, South Boston, with a loss of $25,000.

Tom, a dappled gray, was so badly hurt he had to be killed later in the Engine 13 firehouse on Dorchester avenue.

To avoid a collision with Hose Wagon 2 on Dorchester avenue, Driver Bailey swung his truck too far the other way, crashed into a telegraph pole and a trolley pole and took off the front wheels of the truck, sending his three-horse hitch down in a heap and scaring the other men on the truck in all directions.

Sleeping Girl Rescued.

A two-story tenement house, No. 470 Dorchester avenue, corner of Alger street, was threatened by the flames. Michael Vaxavan, occupying the second floor, did not leave the house, which was filled with smoke from the burning tannery, and rescued Elizabeth Catherine Laffy who was asleep.

The tannery was operated by Porter Brothers. A. H. DuCheene moved in a lot of new machinery to the rear part of the building yesterday, intending to conduct tanning work there himself.

The tannery fronted on Dorchester avenue and extended 150 feet along Dorchester street. The fire started in the front and swept back through the length of the building, burning out the second and third floors and cutting through most of the roof.

The firemen had to be wary all the time of the tall brick chimney which rose fifty feet above the roof. It was feared the heavy brick would warp the chimney over but no disturbance were played on it constantly and it remained standing.

Double Runaway.

At 10 o'clock, just as the fire was brought under control, a hose burst on Engine 2. Two horses, detached from Engine 3, bolted but were caught in Dorchester avenue, who jumped for their heads before they got fairly under way.

A few minutes later two horses bolted from the supply wagon, but were soon stopped by Special Officer Bowling of the Dorchester station just in time to prevent them crashing into three engines at the corner of Dorchester avenue and Dorchester streets.

OUT OF WORK, ROXBURY MAN HANGS HIMSELF

Wife Returning Home Discovers Lifeless Form in Closet.

Disheartened because he had been out of work for seven months, George Karlburne, a machinist of fifty-eight, living at No. 52 Bower street, Roxbury, ended his life last night by hanging himself in the dining room closet.

Mrs. Karlburne left her husband alone in the house when she went shopping at 11 o'clock. She returned at about 11 o'clock and on entering into the dining room was horrified to see the form of her husband swinging on a rope before her.

Karlburne leaves besides a widow, two daughters, aged 20 and 14.

SIGNS OF POISON AS FIVE DIE

Dr. M. W. White Breaks Long Silence in Kelleher Mystery.

HIS STARTLING STATEMENT

Recalls Strange Symptoms in Fatal Illness of Every Patient He Attended.

Early this morning, Dr. Michael W. White of Somerville, the physician who attended five of the members of the family of Mrs. Mary Kelleher, broke silence and made the startling statement that the symptoms of death in five of the six fatal cases were identical with arsenical poison.

Dr. White attended four of the Kelleher family and was consulting physician in a fifth case.

Dr. White had kept silence following the District-Attorney's investigation of the six mysterious deaths—upon directions from the police. He kept his lips sealed but this morning finally admitted that each of the patients gave alarming symptoms, that they grew pale and weak and finally died, exhausted.

He admitted that he had reported his suspicions to Captain Perry of the Somerville police. The doctor's state ment was carefully, but strongly worded. It is the most startling development of this remarkable case. He said:

"As I look back on the cases each one presented the symptoms of persistent vomiting, varying pains, extreme weakness and lassitude, prostration and a slowly progressing weakness finally resulting in death.

"It seemed to me that there was some thing out of the ordinary run of disease which caused these deaths so I thought that if something had been administered arsenic might have caused these deaths

"Strong Diagnosis Never Made."

"As I look back now on the case of Annie Kelleher I realize that a real strong diagnosis was never made although Dr Thomas M. Durell, the medical examiner was called in as a consultant. A definite conclusion was never arrived at.

"Stephen Kelleher, the husband of Mrs. Kelleher, was taken ill with indefinite symptoms which would in no way indicate disease. The consulting physician Dr. Charles F. Maguire and every other and definite diagnoses was not made. Under these conditions Stephen Kelleher was transferred to the Carney Hospital in Boston where he died a short time later.

Peculiar Circumstances.

"Mary Kelleher was sick with sore throat that I diagnosed as tonsilitis. Later on Thomas, the brother, and a sore throat which developed into diphtheria which was reported. Included Mary's case your have been a diphtheritic. Dr. John Neill Mahan of North Cambridge, saw these cases at the time and agreed with me. Thomas recovered but Mary eventually died. Mary's death I thought might have been due to diphtheritic paralysis of the vagus nerve, the nerve that leads from the brain to the heart and stomach.

"Willie had organic heart disease for some years. He was taken sick and remained so for five or six weeks, gradually getting worse and finally died. Dr. John Lorette Moore a specialist of the Back Bay, Boston, was called in consultation on this case and agreed with me.

"The first time I had a suspicion was when I was called in consultation on the case of Mrs. Kelleher case with Dr. Maguire, after another physician had been called in a previous case in the house.

"After watching her symptoms it brought back to my mind the trouble. I had had in diagnosing the first two cases. The final symptoms in these cases was not in accordance with the symptoms.

"In my last two cases there was true organic disease, namely a heart disease and a sore throat which was probably diphtheria, both of which might have caused death and didn't arouse my suspicion."

Taft's Cabinet.

Secretary of the Treasury—MYRON T. HERRICK, of Ohio.

Secretary of War—CHARLES MAGOON.

Attorney-General—FRANK H. HITCHCOCK, of Massachusetts.

Secretary of Agriculture—JAMES WILSON (the present secretary).

Secretary of Commerce and Labor—GEORGE A. KNIGHT, of California.

Boston, Dec. 19.—The decision of the cabinet makeup of President-elect Taft does not has just been agreed to. Chairman Hitchcock of the Republican National committee is that city.

The announcement, that is to be made public tomorrow, it is being published in Washington tonight.

When Governor Knox was called to Boston from Washington last week, it was understood that he was to confer with Mr. Taft relative to the formation of the cabinet, and that he was to be offered the portfolio of the treasury. Mr. Knox declined the offer, however, and the cabinet was then practically complete, before Mr. Taft left Boston. Secretary Hitchcock left Washington for Boston on the same train with Governor Knox, but it is not generally known that he was also offered a portfolio in the cabinet. Before Mr. Taft left Boston Secretary Hitchcock left Washington for Boston on the same train with Governor Knox, but it is not generally known that he was also offered a portfolio in the cabinet. Before Mr. Taft left Boston Secretary Hitchcock left Washington for Boston on the same train with Governor Knox, but it is not generally known that he was also offered a portfolio in the cabinet.

"The selection of Knox as secretary of state, Herrick as secretary of the treasury, Wickersham as attorney-general, and Magoon as secretary of war will probably meet with the approval of the country at large. Mr. Knox was a member of President McKinley's cabinet, and has since been engaged in the practice of law in this city. Mr. Herrick is the present governor of Ohio. Mr. Wickersham is a prominent lawyer of New York city. Mr. Magoon is now governor of the Panama canal zone

3 IMPORTANT NEW WITNESSES FOUND BY POLICE.

Police Investigate These Deaths In Kelleher Family

Stephen Kelleher.....Husband
Mary Kelleher.....Daughter
Catherine Kelleher.....Daughter
Willie Kelleher.....Son
Annie T. Kelleher.....Sister-in-law
Bridget Knowles.....Sister

The police of Somerville, who are investigating the mysterious deaths in the family of Mrs. Mary Keliher, the domestic charged with setting fire to the residence of Andrew J. Lovell at No. 344 Upland road, Cambridge, last night searched the city drug stores in an attempt to trace purchases of arsenic.

To-morrow morning at St. Paul's cemetery in Arlington the body of five-year-old Catherine Kelleher, daughter of Mrs. Kelleher, now held at the East Cambridge jail on the arson charge, will be exhumed for an autopsy.

Medical Examiner William D. Sloan, acting under authority from District Attorney John J. Higgins of Middlesex county to seek permission for the exhumation from the Arlington Board of Health, which was granted.

Dig Up Body of Girl To-day.

Mr. Higgins stated late last night that stomach would be submitted to chemists for tests for poisons.

Dr. Swan stated positively last night that he would proceed to dig up the remains of the little girl to-morrow.

Undertaker W. A. Flaherty, who was in charge of all the burials, declared that the embalming fluids he used there was no arsenic. Should traces of arsenic be found in any of the bodies, it could not, therefore, be laid to this post-mortem process.

The police yesterday discovered several important new witnesses in the case, either relatives or neighbors of the Kelleher family. In every instance these persons declare that in the dying agonies suffered from all the symptoms of poisoning—retching, violent headaches, delirium and fever.

The death certificate says that Stephen Kelleher, the mason's helper, died of pneumonia. Bridget Knowles, Mrs. Kelleher's sister was declared to have died from rheumatism. Annie T. Kelleher, Mrs. Kelleher's sister-in-law, was said to have died of bronchitis, and Willie Kelleher, her son, heart disease.

New Witnesses in Case.

These are the new witnesses:

RUTH DEVITT, the sixteen-year-old chum of Catherine Kelleher, whose story is to be examined. The death certificate in this case ascribed pneumonia poisoning, supposed to have been contracted from Mrs. Kelleher, one at the lawn party of the Holy Name Hospital. Ruth declares that Catherine told her she was sick and had vomited before going to the fete.

MRS. JAMES CANNIFF of Washington street, the owner of the house where two of the deaths occurred, now lives in the tenement the Kelleher occupied. Mrs. Canniff says that Bridget Knowles, the sister of the defendant, whose deaths on June 30, 1905, was laid to rheumatism, had been apparently in perfect health until her decease.

JOHN TROY, brother-in-law of Mrs. Kelleher, has given important information to the police. Troy was suddenly taken at the home of Mrs. Kelleher, and was believed to be dying. A Somerville priest was called to him, but after he went to the home of his brother he suddenly recovered.

Ruth Devitt, the chum of little Catherine who lived at No. 6 Quincy street, from the Kelleher's resided at No. 4, has partly told a graphic and important story of the deaths of her companion and of Willie Kelleher, her brother. The latter died early January 14, 1908, presumably of heart disease, and Catherine died on July 9, following the genuine poisoning.

Dead Girl's Chum's Story.

"Catherine and I were going to the picnic of St. Joseph's parish," she said, "and we used to visit the Kelleher's at No. 7 Durham street. The day of the picnic, about a week before she died, I called at the house for her, but they said she had already gone to the lawn party of the Holy Ghost Hospital, so I went home.

"I went there again the next day and Catherine was sick in bed, though she got up to see me. Getting up made her sick.

"She told me that she had been sick a few days before when she went to the party, but her mother told her to go; that it might make her feel better.

"Catherine complained of awful pains in her head. She told me that she had eaten some blueberry pie at the party, and that made her sick, but I remember now Michael, on Granite street and suddenly how she spoke of being sick before she went.

"I think that was Thursday. I called again on Sunday, and again found her in bed. Catherine thought she had grown worse. She kept vomiting and complaining of her head all the time. I told her mother sent for the priest, Father Cleary, and I got him and he anointed Catherine.

Mother Said She Would Die.

"Catherine told me she would be better soon, but her mother said she was going to die. She was vomiting terribly.

"I went to see her on Wednesday, but they told me I couldn't see her, as she was dying. She passed away on Tuesday. I heard afterward that she was only about twenty-four hours before she died.

"Little Willie Kelleher died January 16, 1908, while the Kelleher's lived at No. 4 Quincy street, next door to us. Willie had been sick for about two months before he died, and his mother said he was suffering from heart trouble. Willie the Kelleher home many times during Willie's illness, and every time that Willie should get up from the bed to go to some other part of the house he had to be helped up.

"Willie attended the St. Joseph Catholic Church parochial school and was a fine little fellow. He used to play around with us a good deal and was very much liked by the priests of St. Joseph's Church.

Troy Taken Seriously Sick.

"I knew of the illness of John Troy, last Winter when he was staying with the Kelleher's, next door to us. I knew her very well that he was very sick shortly after the Kelleher's moved to No. 4 Quincy street, and one of the priests of St. Joseph's Church came to the house to see him because of his serious illness in response to a request which was sent there.

The police of Somerville regard Miss Devitt's story as important, for though John Troy, the prisoner's brother-in-law, denies that he was seriously ill while boarding at her home, it is declared by the neighbors that he received extreme unction. Father McGrath, rector of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, when asked by a reporter last night if one of the clergy men connected with his church had visited Mr. Troy, said:

"That is something that I feel I can not discuss. There are many things which as priests learn that we cannot give out to the world."

Suddenly Recovers.

The police declare that Troy was taken suddenly ill while boarding with Mrs. Kelleher and was believed to be dying, that he was anointed and that he was removed to the home of his brother Michael at No. 10 Granite street. There he suddenly recovered.

An official of the Somerville police department, who did not wish to be quoted, said last night:

"Troy, who now lives with his wife at No. 6 Sheldon street, boarded with Mrs. Kelleher and her sister, Kate Knowles, for eleven months, or up to August. He married Miss Knowles.

Fell in Love With Sister.

"He went to board with Mrs. Kelleher after the death of her husband, Stephen. There were rumors of their coming marriage, but when Kate came to live with her sister, Troy fell in love with her, and he married her about the first of November.

"It was soon after Troy transferred his affections to Miss Knowles that he was suddenly taken ill one morning. He was so sick that a priest was sent for and extreme unction was administered. He was shortly removed to the home of his brother, Michael, on Granite street and suddenly recovered. He was attended by Dr. [illegible] Medford square."

Mrs. James Cannill, who owns the house at No. 344 Washington street, where Bridget Knowles, Annie Kelleher and Stephen Kelleher died, and is charged in the same house, told the following story to a reporter last night:

"Mrs. Kelleher lived here about two years.

"Bridget Knowles, her sister, died on June 30, 1905, of rheumatism, they said. She was about forty years old. She only lived here about three or four months and I didn't see much of her, as she had a sweetheart, and couldn't go out on the street very much. She went to Ireland for her health, but it didn't help her much and she died.

Dead In Four Or Five Days.

"I heard that she had been suddenly taken ill, and in four or five days she was dead.

"The second death, on March 1, 1900, was that of Annie T. Kelleher. Mrs. Kelleher was a sister-in-law. Annie was a seamstress, about 25 years old, who worked for a Mrs. Walsh in Somerville.

"I know when Mrs. Walsh heard of Annie's death she said to me 'Are they killing them all off up there?'

"Annie was always a healthy, robust girl until her last sickness. She was suddenly taken sick and died two weeks later. 'I'm going to die,' she kept saying, and she did.

"Miss Kelleher was reported in the death certificate to have suffered from bronchitis, meningitis and neurasthenia.

"Mrs. Canniff also described the last hours of Stephen Kelleher, the husband, who died suddenly of congestion of the lungs, pneumonia, on May 15, 1908. She said:

Attended Public Party.

"Stephen had been to a public party in Lowell, and came with it. He was sick afterward that they both ate ice cream.

Mr. Kelleher was sick all the next day, and Mary took care of him.

"Steve, who was employed by the Boston Elevated Road, came home at 6 o'clock the next night after the party very sick. He was so bad that he didn't even pick up the children to kiss them, and that he had always done before.

"He told his wife that his head ached terribly and that his stomach felt bad, too. He could hardly drag himself into the house. He couldn't eat any supper and couldn't get up the next morning. Three weeks later he was taken to the Carney Hospital in Boston, and died there two or three nights later.

Raved On His Death Bed.

"From friends who saw him during his last illness I heard that Mr. Kelleher suffered terrible agonies. He vomited constantly and raved so that he had to be held down.

"Mrs. Kelleher took the entire care of him, and when I asked her how he was she was would answer with a sigh, 'Oh, about the same.' Kate Knowles, Mrs. Kelleher's sister, attended to the housework at all times.

"I heard that Stephen Kelleher insured for $1,000 in the Mt. Benedict Court, Massachusetts, division of the Foresters, and that his wife was the beneficiary, also that he had $1 each in some other company and that she got the money. I don't know anything about that.

"I saw Kelleher once before he died. I was in the car one day and I saw him and spoke to the boarder. I told him to 'brace up.' He just nodded, said he had a terrible headache and exclaimed: 'I know I'm going to die.'

Carried $1,000 Insurance.

"I also understood that Bridget Knowles carried $1,000 insurance as a member of the Foresters, and that Annie T. Kelleher carried $500 insurance as a member of the Foresters, and that Annie was insured for $50 in some industrial company.

District Attorney Higgins, referring to his order to Medical Examiner Swan to examine children's bodies, said yesterday last night:

"Yes, the body will be taken from the grave at Arlington on Monday. The order for the exhumation is not the result of any newly discovered evidence. There have been suspicions of foul play in certain quarters, though I have received no evidence on that score. I thought it would be well under the circumstances, to take the caution of removing the girl's body from the grave.

"The medical examiner will perform an autopsy and should he detect any traces of poison in the stomach, action will be taken relative to the exhuming of other bodies."

LUNATIC ON PAROLE SHOOTS AT RANDOM

With Two Revolvers Runs Amuck in Salem; Is Returned to Asylum.

Salem, Dec. 19.—John Wiltz, a civil engineer, released from Danvers Insane Asylum four years ago on parole, caused a reign of terror in the Witch City this afternoon, resulting in a commitment of his violent self to dead center.

Kicked and Bitten.

Carrier Clement Kimball so severely that Kimball had to go to bed.

Secured a revolver and killed a stray cat.

Shot at two other cats.

Fired the last bullet in his revolver at a passing stranger who fled for his life.

Then secured his brother, George Wiltz, and had him terrorized with the revolver, too.

Shot at a dog.

Gave furious battle to three policemen before he was overpowered.

Wiltz is now back in Danvers Asylum, where he was committed from Medford by Justice Frank Atwood pending further examination.

The entire neighborhood was frantic with fear as Wiltz, armed with two guns, ran wildly, blazing away with his revolver. Women and children everywhere fled, screaming and driving women into hysterics.

One telephone call after another poured into police headquarters for help. Hurried, excited telephone messages from their fear crazed wives. Panic-stricken appeal for a walk in the blatantly quiet neighborhood.

Wiltz was committed to Danvers eleven years ago. Then he seemed to improve so rapidly that he was released four years ago on parole. He returned here with his family, and began work on a civil engineer. living with his mother and his brother, George Wiltz, at 11 Hawthorn street. He was thought to be cured of his mental trouble.

SIX DAYS ASLEEP, GIRL SLUMBERS ON

Doctors Sustain Life of Pretty Mill Operative by Liquid Potions.

Augusta, Me., Dec. 19.—Tonight ended the sixth day of the mysterious slumber of Miss Ida Donaldson, a pretty young mill operative, who has dropped in mysterious sleep, ending in apparent "trance" by physicians attending her.

Her case is attracting widespread attention. Doctors, nurses, experts and psychologists from all over the state have visited the home at No. 20 Mill street of sent exhaustive treatises concerning the young woman's condition.

The alarm of her friends is soothed by the statements of the medical men that the girl seems to be suffering no physical harm and that nourishment given her strengthens her strange attack so long as nourishment can be introduced into her system. Life is being maintained in that way. The slumbering girl swallows nourishment as naturally as a person who were awake.

The girl's pulse is practically normal except for a slight nervous twitching of the limbs and the death of her slumber. She refuses to respond to all ordinary methods of rousing a sleeping person. Even when food is put to her lips and is swallowed it sent she accepts the liquids mechanically, but does not awaken.

Ida Donaldson is always been in good health and was a steady employe in the cotton mill of the Edwards Manufacturing Company. She is of happy temperament and has a wide circle of friends. Her parents, young women of nineteen years.

Last Monday morning she started for the mill as usual. Operatives coming to work found her lying in the vestibule of the building. They were unable to rouse her. She was taken home and placed in a carriage and put in bed, without recovering consciousness.

The family doctor, unable to rouse her by ordinary methods, called in other physicians for consultation. It was decided that the slumber was not due to any specific disease as "hysterical trance" and that so long as her vitality was not lowered she should be allowed to sleep.

The first nourishment was administered Wednesday morning, when the girl had been asleep for forty hours. Since she has refused to feed, making the conscious or unconscious gesture. She swallowed the liquid mechanically then fell back in bed and resumed her sleep. Her sleep was and has not been disturbed. At succeeding periods strength equivalent to food has been administered.

The girl is being watched constantly. She is being in the room at the time. It is believed that she will awaken from her unnatural habits of life as enough she has just taken ordinary repose.

WRITES SERMON AND SAVES DOE IN A DAY

Winsted Pastor Catches Big Game While Fishing.

Winsted, Ct., Dec. 19.—Having completed his Sunday sermon, the Rev. H. B. Chawn, of the Methodist church of Falls Village near here, was fishing for trout in the Housatonic river this afternoon, when a doe weighing 150 pounds ran down the bank, and, leaping into the water, swam to the opposite side of the river.

The minister quit fishing for bass and went home with the game, which was landed by several other men he pulled the doe out on the bank. He was presented with somebody else's duck dogs, but found out after he got home that the owner of both was her husband, who saw her get up and swim across the river.

ROOSEVELT DENIES TROUBLE WITH TAFT

Will Have Nothing to Do With Ohio Senate Fight.

Washington, Dec. 19.—President Roosevelt has announced that there is absolutely no truth in a story that he has had any disagreement with Judge W. H. Taft over the candidacy of his brother, C. F. Taft, for Senator from Ohio. The president, in fact, states that the subject of the Ohio senatorship has never been discussed between himself and Mr. Taft, and that he has no thought of in any manner interfering in the contest in that state.

Vanderbilt Coaches to Deliver Turkeys to Poor of Newport

Millionaire's Famous Red Wagons Will Be Feature of Elks' Celebration of Christmas.

Newport, Dec. 19.—Alfred G. Vanderbilt's famous four-horse hitches and his red coaches will play a prominent part in the Christmas celebration among the poor in this city.

Every year the Elks of Newport send out hundreds of turkeys and many baskets of potatoes and other good things to accompany them. These go to gladden the homes of the unfortunates who otherwise would have a cheerless holiday.

This kindlie, Alfred Vanderbilt has come to declare all these preparations. The big lantern-covered wagons, with their leaping steeds will be a feature of Elks' day among poorer quarters of the city, where kind-hearted Santa Claus will distribute the cheer of Vanderbilt will deliver great numbers herself with bountiful things for the Christmas dinner.

ROOSEVELT DID HIT HORSE, GIRL SAYS

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Chicago, Dec. 19.—A statement that President Roosevelt did strike his riding crop to strike a horse ridden by one of the party from the Kenilworth school for girls at Forest Glen, Md., near Washington, in which the president was riding, and dashed past his way party on Thanksgiving day was made yesterday by Lolo Reed, according to a special dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.

Miss Reed, who is home for the holidays, is the first member of the auxiliary riding party, except Miss Helen Taft, daughter, who has told the story, to make any definite statement concerning the Washington incident.

"We were taking our usual canter in company with the chaperone," related Miss Reed. "Suddenly the horses of the family Nevin, when we overtook a horseman. No one of us knew it was the president until we were almost at him and then not one of us wanted to believe it. The horseman rode close to Miss Joyce Langdon of Syracuse, Ill., and said something she took to be:

"You should not ride ahead of my party."

"We were all frightened, he looked so cross, but the head shook some when he looked ahead and struck one of the horses. I won't tell which horse he struck and I've told too much already."

According to Miss Reed, there were in the riding party besides Miss Nevin, Miss Joyce Langdon, Miss Henrietta Greer, of Beaumont, Texas, and others, whose names she could not recall. She denied that Miss Florence Crabbes of Oak Park was in the party.

MISS IRENE SNOW MAKES DEBUT IN BROOKLINE

Receives Congratulations of 500 Friends at Reception.

Mr. and Mrs. Franklin A. Snow of No. 208 Walnut street, Brookline, Mass., introduced yesterday into society their accomplished daughter, Miss Irene Snow, at the residence of congratulations from almost 500 Brookline residents. The debutante is in her twentieth year, is a graduate of the Brookline public schools, of the Girls' School on Beacon street and the Dana Hall school at Wellesley. Her education was completed by a year of European travel. Friends of the family called on her in the evening and poured tea after the reception.

STEPS ON MATCH; DIES OF BURNS

Waltham Woman Is Victim of Peculiar Accident.

As the result of burns due to stepping on a wax match at her home, Mrs. Emma Fuller, aged 60 years, died at No. 14 Newton street, Waltham, died late yesterday afternoon. When Mrs. Frederick stepped on a sunup match, her clothes were quickly enveloping her body with flames. Her husband, John W. Broderick, rushed to her aid, managed to extinguish the flames, but not before he had been badly burned himself.

GIRL DARES DEATH IN FIRE TO SAVE HER BLIND SISTER.

Thrilling Rescues from Burning House on Belmont Avenue, in Brockton.

Brockton, Dec. 19.—Thrilling rescues, one by an eleven-year-old girl, Harriet Holbrook, who saved the life of her blind sister, Carrie, 17 years old, and the driving of three families from their beds to the frozen streets at 4 a. m. today, were incidents of the worst fire on Belmont avenue for many years. The house owned by Mrs. A. H. Holbrook, No. 337, was the scene.

One child, but a year old, who has been sick for a week with pneumonia, was seized by its mother, Mrs. W. H. Howes, who did not have time even to put a shoe on, and rushed out into the cold. The little one was tenderly cared for by neighbors.

Mrs. T. Hunter, who lived on the top floor, had barely time to get her yearold infant and rush in the street in her night clothes. Mrs. W. H. Howes, after seeing her child to safety, remembered her blind sister and rushed back into the burning building and found the animal frightened. It had been deaf, so frightened that he could do nothing for himself. The brave little girl crawled to her side, and she picked him up and carried him to safety.

Mrs. Holbrook, who owns the residence, was awakened by the smoke. She aroused her husband and they aroused the families of W. H. Howes and L. T. Hunter. The latter family were on the upper floor and were in great peril.

The fire in the house was attached to the flames in the kitchen, where the fire was discovered. While Mr. Holbrook was using this Mr. Hunter rushed to the adjoining house with the alarm. The fire was quickly extinguished, but it had burned up through the walls and was eating its way to the floors above.

The pathetic affection of little Harriet Holbrook for her blind sister, who was in the room when the fire broke out, was the heroism. Making her way through smoke and darkness, she reached her sister and led her out through the corridor to the street in safety.

MERCHANTS TO PROTEST EXPRESS COMPANY RATES

Conditions Worse, Business Men Declare, Since Sliding Scale Adoption.

To protest against the rates charged by the National and American Express companies, members of the Boston Merchants Association will appear before the Massachusetts Railroad Commissioners tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

Following a previous hearing the Railroad Commissioners decided that the rates charged by both companies were excessive and ordered a readjustment of prices. The companies adopted a "sliding scale" system, but the members of the Merchants Association say they have suffered more since.

James F. Jackson, former chairman of the Railroad Commission, will handle the hearing for the association.

MRS. HAINS VANISHES BEFORE DAWN.

MOVEMENT KEPT SECRET

May Have Gone to New York for Conference With District Attorney Darrin.

Mrs. Claudia Libby Haines has contributed an element of mystery to the sensational Haines murder trial by suddenly vanishing.

Where she has gone and why she has gone are known to only a few persons. These are as quiet as the Sphinx upon the question.

Mrs. Haines' inexplicable movement admits of but a single surmise. The young woman whose father-in-law, Mrs. William E. Annis at the Bayside Yacht Club in New York, while announcing her intention of not attending either the trial of her husband or that of his brother, T. Jenkins Haines, the hearing of whose individual case on the charge of murder is now in progress, has declared frequently that if she were summoned to New York by District Attorney Darrin, she would respond at once.

Maybe Called As a Witness.

The single deduction, as to her strange absence from Boston, is that she has been called to New York, if not to take the witness stand against T. Jenkins Haines, at least to give the benefit of a conference with the prosecution.

Utmost efforts were made to keep Mrs. Haines's departure from her parents' home in Crest avenue, Winthrop, a profound secret. At first those acquainted with her intentions refused to acknowledge at all that she had gone away. Then, when made to understand that Mrs. Haines's movements had become known in the face of precaution, the departure from Boston was confessed, though no word more could be coaxed.

Mrs. Haines left her parents' home early yesterday morning, so early indeed that the sun was not up. Apparently she planned to leave in hopes that she would not be recognized in the early morning twilight.

If this was her purpose she was disappointed. The conductor of the narrow gauge train leaving Winthrop at 6 o'clock saw her and recognized her. He knows Mrs. Haines by sight very well, and he is positive in his identification. He had ample opportunity, furthermore, to confirm his first glance of recognition when he went to collect her fare.

Escorted by a Strange Man.

Mrs. Haines wore a large hat and a fashionable travelling coat. She carried a suit case, which was obviously filled with a supply of clothing for a two or three day trip.

More mystery here enters into the incident for Mrs. Haines was accompanied by a strange man, who also carried handluggage. This man was clad in a tight-buttoned coat and a black derby hat. His distinguishing facial mark was a heavy black moustache.

No one around the Winthrop depot who saw them could recall having seen the man before. While he was not recognized as Mr. Haines' wife constantly, his attitude is described as being one only of a deferential escort.

When Mrs. Libby, Mrs. Haines's mother, was asked yesterday forenoon if her daughter was at home, she replied with evident reluctance that Mrs. Haines was gone.

Mrs. Haines's Mother Reticent.

After much hesitation Mrs. Libbey at last admitted that Mrs. Haines had left Winthrop.

"Will she return to-day?" was the next question.

"I do not know."

"When will she return?"

"I do not know."

"Has she gone to New York?"

"I do not know."

"Where has she gone?"

"I do not know."

Still the fact remains that Mrs. Claudia Haines has vanished.

And the question arises: Was her unidentified escort a messenger from District Attorney Darrin's office and has she gone to New York to testify against T. Jenkins Haines, her husband's brother?

THORNTON HAINS MUST FACE MRS. ANNIS AGAIN

Flushing, L. I., Dec. 19.—Although for three days Thornton Jenkins Haines charged with the murder of William E. Annis, just as if he had fired the fatal shots, has faced the witnesses for the State, his real ordeal is yet to come.

It is true that he has faced Mrs. Annis, the woman his army captain brother enslaved, in the courtroom and on the witness stand. He has not heard her real testimony. She was excluded this week only to establish the fact that this legal play out in the old town hall in Flushing was a murder trial—in other words, that a man had been murdered.

Then there is Roberts, Bayside Yacht Club member, a man who was on the boat when Annis was shot to bits in his boat as he was trying to land. Roberts cannot be called until next week and on the testimony of Roberts, or rather on what flaws Attorney McIntyre of the defence is able to find in it, largely depend Thornton Haines's chances for a disagreement or a verdict for one of the lesser degrees of murder.

When the State started off flamboyantly with its opening address to the jury it could see nothing but a question of murder in the first degree. That, in New York State, would mean the electric chair at Sing Sing for this cold and collected writer of sea tales.

Bets Laid on Disagreement.

Now, outside of the employed attorneys for the prosecution and the overanxious witnesses for the State, there is no one at the trial who dreams of anything but a lesser degree. Bets are already being laid that there will be a disagreement, and the odds on acquittal are not heavy. The puzzle is the jury rather than the evidence.

The why of this is plain.

That a man was murdered there is no doubt. Coroner Doe testified that he was simply riddled with bullets. It is a wonderful advertisement for a certain automatic pistol, and that the fellow members who dodged behind boats and climbed under wharves were justified must be conceded by any one who has seen the chart of the course in which Annis There are twenty of them, though but seven shots were fired at the victim.

Mrs. Annis is coming back to the stand. Prosecutor Darrin promised it so he told the court room when a sudden adjournment was taken on Friday until Monday. But more than promised it, for Darrin knows that "Bulldog" McIntyre, when bent on tangle up the witnesses for the State, will be most gentle with the beautiful widow of the victim of Captain Haines's fatal automatic gun.

It is a question how much the prosecutor hopes to get from Mrs. Annis. According to the other witnesses of the killing, she was hardly in a state of mind to remember much about the tragedy.

If she be questioned, and if she can tell, Thornton Haines will then and there face the witness who will have most effect with the jury. His attorneys are handicapped. They cannot go at her in the subtle, polished style which breaks down the fellow members of Annis's yacht club. He cannot even ask her if she has rehearsed her story. He won't even dare to ask her how many times she has seen the District Attorney.

Mrs. Annis is a widow. The brother of the defendant made her so. She has three fatherless children. The allegation that her husband wrecked Captain Haines's home has not yet gone into the record. It is said that Mrs. Annis knew nothing of it. Of course, the defence would be glad if she was not recalled.

The other woman in the case, Claudia Haines, the wife of the Captain who is yet to be tried for the actual murder, is no longer for her mother in Massachusetts. She is beyond reach of the subpoena of either side.

From her safe retreat in another State she has dared both the prosecution and the defence.

"Let them ask me to come to the trial of Thornton Haines," she says, over the long-distance telephone.

She would not testify against her husband, because the State could not make her, and any evidence she might give would be open to objection. Certainly the Thornton Haines defence will not seek for it as much as Mr. McIntyre declares that he would like to cross-examine her.

DEPICTS ANNIS AS JEKYLL AND HYDE

BY DOROTHY DIX.

FLUSHING, L. I., Dec. 21.—A second and still more vivid picture of Annis is given in the following article:

It is scarcely more than it takes for the drawing of a breath, or the batting of an eyelash, to sum up a character or form that intellectual space of time

How much may a man hear in it.

How much may a man sense of what is going on about him in it?

How much may a man do and say in it.

The most important part of the trial of Thornton Haines for alleged complicity in the murder of Annis was the question of time and what can happen in a given period. In the three or several and three breaths to empty an automatic gun, single out a victim and shoot him. Peter Haines killed Annis. All of the witnesses for the prosecution who have given testimony agree that when the army officer with the nose was found dead he had run into the dock in his little boat he stepped up to the dock and Captain Haines fired on the boom, cried out "Annis," and in exactly regular firing, "bang, bang, bang" with no perceptible interval between the reports, therefore practically certain that Captain Haines, who still had one shot left in his revolver, did not consume more than the second and three months required to exhaust the gun in his deed of murder.

The witness for the prosecution who agree that at the time that Annis sailed up to the dock and Captain Haines began firing Thornton Haines was standing perfectly and calmly looking on, with no weapon in his hand.

Were All Occupied.

The witnesses for the prosecution have told, too, what they were doing at that time. Mr. Andrews was wrestling on the bow of his son's boat. Mr. Birchfield, who was to sail with Annis, had run down to the edge of the float that was reserved for Annis's boat from the dock as it came in. Mr. Fuhrke was fixing a fishing rod, each intent on his own occupation until the first shot startled them all into vigilant attention.

Then each of three witnesses testifies that Thornton Haines did a different thing, and each a different thing to each of them. According to Mr. Andrews, Thornton Haines leveled a gun at him and yelled, "Keep back! Stand back! I am running this thing."

According to Mr. Birchfield, Haines pointed a revolver at him and cried out, "Keep back! Keep back! Be careful what he is doing," and he likewise pointed the revolver at Fuhrke, who also cried out back and waved the pistol at the crowd.

According to Mr. Fuhrke, Thornton Haines pointed a gun at him, and he rushed back. According to Mr. Roberts, Thornton Haines pointed a gun at him and cried out, "Keep back! Keep back," or one will get the same that he has.

All of the according to these witnesses, happened in the second and three-tenths that elapsed between the firing of the first shot and the last by Captain Peter Haines, all of which raises the extremely vital question of whether it would be possible for a man to draw a gun, point it at several different individuals and utter a specific, different threat to each in that length of time.

It is also notable that each of the different witnesses has testified that neither one of them heard Thornton Haines warn anybody but himself against interfering with his brother, although all of them were close together.

Defence Riddles Witnesses.

The defence scored two important points during the day. The first was in turning the spot light, so to speak, on the time limit and showing how impossible it would have been for Thornton Haines, he was so quick on the trigger and nimble witted, to have done and said all the things he is alleged to have said and done during the time Captain Haines was slaying his enemy.

The second was when Mr. Fuhrke, a handsome young German, and one of the star witnesses for the prosecution, was forced on adroit cross-examination that Thornton Haines had asked him if he had seen the real estate agent Jesperson, and that when he had replied that he had not Thornton Haines had said, "Well, if Jesperson is not here, I think I will go home." Mr. Birchfield also testified that immediately after he told Haines that Annis was in the race Thornton Haines said to Peter, "Jesperson not here; come, let's go home, Captain," thus refuting the assertion that the two brothers came to the yacht club seeking Annis, with deliberate intent to kill him.

Again was the ghost of Claudia and her lover made to skulk across the stage, when Mr. McIntyre thundered at the witness a demand to know if he did not hear Captain Haines cry out as he shot Annis down, "Annis, you have ruined my home; you have disgraced my children; you have stolen my wife, and have had an operation performed on her."

The witness replied he had heard nothing but the Captain's cry of "Annis" and then heard the shots, but the black wrong that lay behind the shots floated like an evil shipl across the grey room.

The court proceedings of the day were a repetition of those of the past two days, with merely a change of names of witnesses who had preceded the present ones. They were all members of the Bayside Yacht Club and they recounted again the gay picnic party of that Sunday day last August that was so suddenly shot through with tragedy. There was the ripple of fine waters and the gleam of white sails, the echo of light laughter and the clink of wine glasses as they lay in their stories, and then suddenly a pistol shot, a wounded, terrified scream, and Death had stalked in amongst them.

They had to live over and over again the arrival of the two Haines brothers at the Bayside Yacht Club, before the beginning of the neighborhood regatta; of Thornton Haines's query for real estate and they have all described Peter Haines as a man with a drooping, wounded manner, arms crossed upon his breast, taking no part in the proceedings until he seemed to be gathering into sudden life and fury at the sight of Annis, whom he killed.

Then each witness has told his own version of what Thornton Haines did during the shooting, and then Mr. McIntyre has had to cross-examine the witness, and has hammered his story into such a shape that his own father did not know it when he got through with it.

CONGRESS ADJOURNS FEARING ATTACK BY PRESIDENT.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Washington, Dec. 19.—Congress adjourned to-day until January 4. The two houses were in session about fifteen minutes. It was officially explained that there was a desire on the part of the members to get home. But among individuals there was no concealment of the fact that it was regarded as wise to go through as soon as possible and adjourn lest at the last minute the President should change his mind and send in the special message on secret service to the discomfort of the members during the Christmas holidays.

There was but routine business and very little of that was disposed of.

In the Senate as Secretary Latta, with several routine communications from the President, was compelled to wait 15 minutes before the message could be presented.

The reading of the Journal being completed in the meantime. But there was no discernment to the President in the Senator Lodge, the President's friend, rose to say he objected to an interruption of the reading of the Journal. Presidential communications are frequently taken up in this way. The Senate has a dislike to uptodd, which even a President may respect.

The Senate leaders have decided upon a thoughtful and deliberate course in carrying out their plan to rebuke the President for his secret service matter. There will be no meeting during the holidays of opportunities sometime, which is to investigate the secret service and report to the next session. The Journalistic was raised in the annual message.

It was announced to-day that President Roosevelt may work the "friendly parade" on Congress in his reply to the present resolution of inquiry on the secret service incident.

It is understood taht there is now a course of practice on a part of the democratic members of the House during the last May, when Chairman Tawney of the committee on appropriations led a movement to incorporate in the sundry civil appropriation bill the paragraph prohibiting any part of the money being set aside for expenses within outside of the regular Treasury Department work of the secret service.

The one caller the President said himself would occupy a higher plane than to discuss the matter, but when asked if he would mention names in justification of his action he laughingly replied that he could not be expected to "use himself."

The Presidentbes under consideration plan to consolidate all the detective bureaus of the government under one management and to take the hands of the Department of Justices. His message in addition to Congress may be incorporated in a special message or be embodied in his reply he is preparing for Congress on the secret service matter.

The name of the new bureau will be the Department of Criminal Investigation. It will include those offices and divisions of the government now serving as detective or postoffice investigation services, customs inspection services, internal revenue agents, bonus examiners and land office agents.

JUDGE WEEPS WHEN NIGHTRIDER VICTIM TELLS STORY.

Shaking With Emotion, Aged Colonel Taylor Bares Slaying of Rankin.

Union City, Tenn., Dec. 19.—The eight nightrider prisoners were the only persons in the court room, who betrayed no feeling today, when Col. R. Z. Taylor, his snow white hair hanging about his shoulders, and his frame shaking with emotion, told of the killing of his friend, Capt. Quincy Rankin, in the Night Riders of Western Tennessee. Tears rolled down the cheeks of Judge Jones, while even the attorneys for the defense had to turn their heads.

The recital of the state's star witness, was one of the most dramatic scenes ever enacted in a Tennessee courtroom. In a voice weakened by age and his recent terrible experiences, Col. Taylor told how he and Capt. Rankin, 24 years younger, had gone to Walnut Log Hotel on Reelfoot Lake; how they were awakened about midnight by from 25 to 35 masked men and ordered to dress; how they were then taken from the building and marched half a mile away to a deserted spot along the lake.

"The whole war over they were asking how much was paid per nigger for his decision in our favor," said Colonel Taylor. "The leader was in a frenzy. They led us under a forked tree, the over-hanging limbs of which was about nine feet high. Here they told us they were going to kill us.

"Gentlemen, you can't cheat me out of much," said, "I'm 62 years old and have lived my life. I'm not afraid to die. Kill me and save the life of Captain Rankin. He is younger." They threw the end of the rope over the limb of the tree and did the same with one around the neck of Captain Rankin. Then they pulled him up by his feet from the ground he cried: "Oh, gentlemen, don't do that! You are hanging me! You're killing me!"

Here the old man broke down completely. Not a sound could be heard in the room but his sobs. After four minutes he resumed:

"Suddenly I heard a gunshot and saw a body in the Captain Rankin's coat. I made a dash for the lake, but a few rods away I jumped in as far out as I could. I stayed under water until my breath gave out. As I took a breath I came up on the other side of a log.

"I had hardly come up behind the log until shooting began. They were firing at the log. I thought that it would never stop."

He told how he waited until the night riders, thinking he had been killed, went away and then came out on the banks. He made his way into the hill grass and timbers, keeping his direction by the stars. His family was also under guard while parts of the lake into Lake county, where he thought he would be safe.

"My eyesight was so impaired by this time that I could not see. I walked in a man's all around me," he said. "I finally decided they were only looking for me. I then made a cautiously go on with my eyes in that condition, so I made my way to the house and got into the tall grass and beat it down, making a bed for myself. I stayed all day and then started on again after dark. I was famished for food. I had had a drink of water.

"In the morning I decided I must have food or die. I walked up to a big bindgeon and went up to the first house that I came into. Here I was given water. I knew I was then safe."

BALLANTYNE ENTERS LISTS AS CHAIRMAN OF ALDERMEN.

As Republican Takes Field for Honors in Upper Board Against Curley.

"The State government of Massachusetts is centered in the office of the Alderman of Boston. Boston should be given a free hand to say who run it. As the representatives of the people we are the people's choice, so the people of Boston are more able to know what they want."—Walter Ballantyne, Candidate for the office of chairman of Board of Aldermen.

Alderman Walter Ballantyne yesterday announced his candidacy for the chairmanship of the Board of Aldermen. As the leading Republican member of the board last December he made a good record, and the support of Republican members of the board. He made a splendid presiding officer, and is considered a formidable opponent for the chairmanship when Democrats are in control. Ballantyne's announcement reads:

"I have decided to be a candidate for chairman of the Board of Aldermen. I have served as alderman two years, and have served as long as an alderman can serve without being a member of some committee. I have had the honor of presiding at many meetings of the board as president pro tem, and as presiding in many different Scottish Clubs. For two years I have been a member of the Boston Finance Commission, and have been closely connected with all of the affairs of Ward 17, and have been in business ever since I came to Boston 30 years ago. I have been on the ward committee for many years, and last year I was honored with the highest vote of any of the aldermen.

"In regard to affairs of the upper I want to say that I am opposed to much interference with city government by outside interests. Mr. Ballantyne said emphatically. "The State Legislature then our business and not to any interference in laying down the law on local matters. I am willing to say exactly how we are handicapped in doing what we want to do for the city, but that is not in the province of the Legislature to plan out our street railway system. It is proper that there should judge as to the amount of money we should spend but beyond that I do not think they have further rights.

"What do I consider our policy in the board will be this year? It is too early to say definitely. We are waiting to see what the new city charter will provide. We should have a larger financial scope. The old-age pension act will be taken up, and I have distinct ideas on this matter. Old employes of the city should not be superannuated after they have reached a certain number of years. As long as they have the ability to work I do not think they should be deprived of the right to work.

"On the other hand, I do not think that when a faithful servant of the city has become incapacitated for further work his age should make any difference. He should receive a pension for service rendered. He should not be denied it because he does not happen to be over sixty years of age. A good, clean administration and an honest effort to give the city a thoroughly up to date government should be the rule of the day. I am sure that the people will have much to learn from me no doubt. Nearly every continental city can give us pointers on municipal government. One of the reasons for this is that good men do not seem to think there is much honor in being an alderman. We also have a lack of unity of purpose. The councilmen and aldermen find it hard to work for the one thing. Besides, a man does not get a chance to learn all he should in the short time he is permitted to hold office.

"See the difference in what we term sleepy Europe and in England and Scotland. There a man stays in office in an official position, and can give the utmost advice to the heads of municipal government.

Mr. Ballantyne was born in 1882. He comes from a family of woolen manufacturers in the lowlands of Scotland. But he did not carry on the business of his ancestors. It was as a representative of an insurance company that he came to Boston with his young wife, formerly Miss Helen A. Sherwood, daughter of Rev. Willson, who, now in his ninetieth year, has his photograph on picture post cards in the littletown of Walkerburn as the oldest inhabitant there.

FLEISCHER DOUBTS JACOB'S PROPHECY

Rabbi Declares Story in Genesis Is Simply the Rhapsody of a Poet.

That the Biblical story to explain the Israelites blessing the twelve sons, the heads of the twelve tribes of Israel, was almost utterly impossible and simply a rhapsody, was the declaration made by Rabbi Fleischer in Temple Adath Israel yesterday.

Rabbi Fleischer said that the story which he had read from the Bible could have been written by a historian as well as by Jacob was supposed to have said, but it was interpolated generations afterward. Jacob, he said, could not have and our father could have acted on his deathbed in the manner the Bible says that Jacob did, blessing some sons and cursing others.

Rabbi Fleischer said, further:

"If anyone some of the orthodox religion he will say that Jacob was gifted with the power of prophesying. But the Jews would be the last to believe in prophesy. I cannot for a moment accept the ring story that Jacob was gifted with prophesy and that the spirit of the future of the twelve tribes, the makeup of the traditional people."

DECLARE TRAMPS WRECKED FREIGHT

Railroad Men Sure Tampered Switch Caused West Cambridge Collision.

Somebody tampered with the switch and rail road officials say it was deliberately done, and a 40-car freight train and a huge locomotive of the Boston & Maine railroad met with a string of empty cars on the Fitchburg division of the road at Hill's Crossing siding, Cambridge station.

The cars fell all over each other, the locomotive fit more than any other, blocking it for more than two hours and causing great inconvenience to hundreds of commuters from Lexington, Arlington and Belmont.

The train left the North Cambridge yards at 7:30 o'clock yesterday morning in charge of Engineer Charles Strong and Conductor Thomas Dooley. They had orders to run to Lexington and then to New Hill Crossing. They left the main line to get on the siding, setting the rails to switch, setting the rails to the right where the empties were to be left and to line up the switch. The engineer did not know the change had been made until he saw the engine with its long line of cars coming at him. His wife jammed his air brakes down hard but the tracks were slippery and the momentum required was too much for the engine hit the engine very light and shoved them in a heap like a row of giants. Dooley and Strong jumped and escaped over on the main line.

None of the train crew was injured. The weight of the engine kept it on the rails although the Bible was badly smashed. Wreckers answered calls but found a almost inextricable mass of twisted cars and stringers and it was almost noon before they got the lines re-opened.

A large squad of railroad detectives are working on the case. Trainmen have been found in the cabs of the engines severely recently and it is believed one of them, inspired by a desire for revenge, has deliberately tried to wreck the train. The damage cost the company several hundred dollars.

JURY DISMISSED IN $65,000 DAMAGE SUIT

Unable to Agree in Railroad Case in U. S. Court.

After continuous efforts for eighteen hours to get together in accord, a disagreed jury in the United States circuit court reported that it was impossible to agree any agreement, and was discharged. The action was to recover $65,000 for damages, brought against the Boston & Maine Railroad by Alice B. Minard and Warren G. Partridge, as administrator for Philip F. Partridge of Philadelphia.

On August 18, 1901, a train crashed into a carriage in which the plaintiffs were driving at Kennebunk, Me., killing Partridge and inflicting serious injuries on the carriage. The asked for $65,000 and the administrator of the estate of the man killed asked for $15,000.

Wanted, an Owner for Brainstorm Cow Now Held by Police

"If No One Comes, I'm To Be Sold at Auction," Mooc Holstein Bossy.

Who wants to own a perfectly sane cow?

The police department advertised yesterday for the owner of the black and white Holstein cow, which was caught in Franklin Park, Roxbury, becoming in the sense of leaving the reservation, after a chase from Jamaica Plain police station, after she had broken open all inmate's stalls, some who by the hairdos did a few weeks before.

The cow was thought rabid. It was known that she had run amuck, but it was not examined as to her sanity by Dr. Al Bryant, the veterinary surgeon of Boston, until yesterday, when it was announced not rabid.

Then the police department put police hopes of finding her former owner. Assistant Farm, the police department, and Assistant Farmer Lewis S. Wallis, the official "farmer" of the park system, were detailed to the task of telling Captain Wescott's men to deliver the cow to any one who can prove it is not to being hers in there.

Should the animal be put into the administration plant of Franklin Park on Seaver street, next to the Depot of Park Superintendent John A. Pettigrew, it will be sold at auction Tuesday, unless some one gets her cow.

"If no one comes," said Captain Wescott, "she was caught in park grounds. Anyhow, you know we will be the first to get her. Then we will be the first to get up, maybe fudging a bill on damages. Yesterday the cow was presented to Park Superintendent Pettigrew's request and took the cow to Dorchester avenue and put her in charge of Captain Philemon H. Warren. According to the advertisement, the police will sell the cow at auction Tuesday, if no one claims her.

FR. CASSIDY RESIGNS HIS FALL RIVER POST

Aggressive Temperance Worker Gives Chancellor Work to Rev. Fr. Carr.

Fall River, Dec. 19. The Rev. James E. Cassidy, pastor of St. Mary's Cathedral and chancellor of the diocese, has written to Bishop Feehan resigning his position as chancellor, which he was appointed by the late Bishop Stang. He continues as rector of the cathedral parish.

Fr. Cassidy took an active and aggressive part in the prohibition campaign for his diocese. His vigorous sermons against the liquor trade had a marked effect in having this city vote "no."

The new chancellor will be the Rev. Edward J. Carr, at present private secretary of Bishop Feehan. Fr. Carr is a native of Taunton.

Veto by Roosevelt.

Washington, Dec. 19.—President Roosevelt today sent to the Senate his veto of the joint resolution to establish the boundary line between Colorado and Oklahoma and the territory of New Mexico, on the ground that the resolution would not be binding on Colorado.

ENGLISH HIGH BOYS EAGER FOR REUNION

Old Graduates Coming From All Over the Land for Meeting of January 14.

Scores of English High School "boys" of all ages, from every corner of the country, who graduated from the school prior to 1868, will attend the annual reunion and dinner of the alumni at the Boston City Club on the evening of January 14. Representative business men in the business and professional world, captains of industry, financiers, artists, bankers, manufacturers, merchants, physicians and architects will journey back to the old old times with their classmates and members. The reunion promises to be one of the most memorable events in the eighty-eight years' history of the English High School.

Charles F. Brigham, president of the English High School Association, is to preside and Professor Barrett Harvard is to be one of the speakers. The committee in charge expect that J. Herbert Hedges, a graduate of the English High School will be present to address his old classmates.

One of the remarkable things in English High School spirit and the impossibility of securing accommodations for the hundreds of "English High School boys" who want to attend, is the willingness of the oldest living alumni to are asked to send six names and addresses to Box 1905, class of '73, Box 5295, Post office, Boston.

$22,500 BY MRS. SAGE IN XMAS GIFTS TO SCHOOLS

Donates History of Ancestors Who Were Founders of System.

New York, Dec. 19.—Some of the oldest presents to be distributed Christmas Day will be those of Mrs. Sage to Russell Sage. The recipients of the gifts will be 450 public schools in the United States. The gifts consist of copies containing a history of the Sage, Slocum and allied families of Montague, Warren, Brown, Jewett, Stanton, Doty, Cornell, Germain or Germain, Pierson and Howell in England and America.

The widow of the famous financier chose such gifts because persons and newspapers were among the founders of the families mentioned in the United States. Each gift will represent an expenditure of $500.

Marlowe Curtain at 8.

Announcement is made from the Majestic Theatre that for the engagement of Julia Marlowe, beginning tomorrow night, the curtain will rise promptly at 8 o'clock, and all persons not in their seats at the rise of the curtain will be required to wait until the end of the act before being seated.

LIBEL LAW EXPERT IN TALK WITH ROOSEVELT

Washington, Dec. 19.—Judge John G. Gordon of Philadelphia, an expert on libel law, had a conference with President Roosevelt today. He carried a bundle of papers in with him. He declined afterward to discuss his mission.

Bad Breath From Teeth and Stomach

Free Trial Package By Mail.

The teeth secret much of the decay from food and the acids from the mouth cause such decay to assume a cancerous state which quickly makes horrible odors.

Charcoal is one of the strongest absorbers known, and mixed with the saliva of the mouth it quickly takes away the bad effects of mouth decay, acids and odors.

Charcoal will absorb one hundred times its volume in gases.

Charcoal is used at sea to keep water sweet. A little charcoal in a pan keeps an refrigerator sweet and free from decaying odors, also a sleeping room or foul cellar or silk.

John Turnbull of Glasgow, Scotland, a famous chemist, cured over 1000 dead dogs with charcoal and placed them in his study without any covering whatever beyond charcoal. In six months time only the bones of the dogs remained. And the flesh was entirely gone, yet no odor whatever had permeated the study during the decay of the animals, notwithstanding the weather was highly conducive to rapid decay.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made from willow charcoal, the finest. Willow is the most porous charcoal obtainable, and therefore absorbs quickly and in greater quantity than other charcoal. It contains carbon, hydrogen, oxygen and nitrogen.

Charcoal from the willow is free from grit. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges cure diarrhea and constipation and stop foul breath from stomach or mouth odors. They contain nothing but charcoal and honey.

Eat two or three little lozenges after eating meal and a bed time and you will soon stop all foul gases from arising. You will sweeten your breath and aid your digestion, blood and liver.

Every druggist carries Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges in stock, price 25 cents, or send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package by mail free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Unparalleled Low Prices On Christmas Goods

AN EFFORT TO MAKE MONDAY THE BIGGEST DAY SINCE THE FOUNDING OF OUR BOSTON HOUSE

Our Christmas present to the New England public will be in the form of a saving of one-half or more—or thousands of dollars—on Christmas goods and seasonable merchandise. Once a year it is our policy to inaugurate an extraordinary carnival of price reductions on the last Monday preceding Christmas. Every item in this advertisement was rigidly inspected and marked down personally by Mr. Henry Siegel, the one idea being to break all previous selling records regardless of cost or profits. Merchandise that is strictly holiday goods will be found everywhere at reductions equal to any in this announcement. We didn't have room for all of them here, but they are advertised in other papers. STORE OPEN EVENINGS UNTIL CHRISTMAS.

$500 PRIZE BEAUTY IN DEATH RACE ON WEDDING TRIP.

Handsome Swampscott Girl's Elopement Followed by Coast-to-Coast Run.

BOY HUSBAND'S MOTHER ILL!

sought after by famous painters and portrait artists, who called her "the prettiest girl in all New England," fascinating, accomplished eighteen-year-old Mary Margaret Cullen, daughter of one of Swampscott's most aristocratic families, who created a sensation in social circles at the North Shore by eloping with Harlow Mower, an Exeter student, is speeding across the continent, with her husband, striving to reach Portland, Ore., to see her mother-in-law, who is near to death.

The marriage of the pretty beauty and her student sweetheart, together with the race from ocean to ocean, is the direct result of a telegram which young Mower received from his home in Exeter, announcing a few hours before the marriage.

Brief, but to the point, was the message, told of the serious illness of his mother, and requested Mower to go immediately to her his home. The message settled the question. Mower proposed to his sweetheart, she accepted him, and three hours after the couple were standing outside of the city clerk's office at Providence, man

Story of Pretty Romance.

Returning to the parental home of the happy bride, the couple received the blessing the bride's father. And soon after, with only a few intimate friends to see them off, they left Boston on their honeymoon—on their race with death.

The marriage of Mower and Miss Cullen was the culmination of a pretty romance that had its beginning early last year, when the former met the pretty second girl at a select house party at Exeter.

A prominent society matron of Exeter, knowing them together for a formal declaration, and noting the flash which came to the young man's eyes as he met the handsome girl, cleverly contrived to bring the couple side by side at a dinner table, the conversation at the table was matter of fact talk characteristic of all dinner parties, but it gave the young man the opening that he desired.

Succeeding an invitation to call and meet her parents, Mower in a few weeks paid a formal visit to the charming summer girl at No. 164 Burrill street, where the Cullen's reside.

Welcomed at Cullen Home.

EWS CASE AS ALIENIST

BY DOROTHY AMES.

Jimmy, you can't come to my house more. If your father doesn't want there. I'm not going to let you go."

Those were the last words of Maude artley. The next day she was shot to ath by the youth whose visits she had bidden.

That action of Maude's was the last aw, the one bit of pressure that was much on Jimmy Harmon's troubled ain," yesterday said Dr. R. Agnes artley, speaking of the child girl. "I ve made a special study of the brain d I feel sure that the boy was absolute crazy when he killed Maude.

"If he had been in his right mind, he ould never have harmed a hair of the irl's head. There was no boy with whom I would sooner have trusted Maude an Jimmy Harmon.

"Hate him? How can I? The bright ayish fellow who has been coming to y house for years? Only great pity ells up in my heart for the poor unfortunate.

Youth of Many Worries.

Harmon had a lot of things ong him. He was out of work. He ad expected to get a position in New ork, but did not succeed. He was blue ecause he had no work and no money. e had had misunderstandings with his ather.

"His father came here Thursday orning and asked us not to let Jimmy ome to our house. Maude was a proud, ndependent little thing. She never eard of what Mr. Harmon had said, he went right over to their house Thurs ay night to see both Mr. Harman and immy. Mr. Harmon had gone out and he talked with Jimmy alone. She told him what his father had said and declared that as long as his father didn't want him to come she wasn't going to let him.

It was to her he told his troubles. It was to her he went when he was feeling blue and despondent. And he never went in vain. She was a girl who couldn't be unhappy. She breathed out good nature and fun and laughter.

He went to her disheartened and at odds with himself and the world and he wouldn't be at her house five minutes be-

ONLY PITY FOR BOY WHO KILLED MY GIRL, SORROWING MOTHER SAYS

Hate him? How can I? I have only pity for the poor boy, whose reason was unhinged.

Jealousy does not enter into the case at all. Jimmy Harmon killed my daughter Maude because he was crazy.

Maude was one of the dearest, sweetest girls that ever lived. I don't know how we can endure the blow of her death, but I feel no resentment.

I am a physician and have studied brain troubles. The more I ponder this case the more convinced I am that Jimmy Harmon was stricken with acute insanity.

It is well known to alienists that persons suffering as Jimmy Harmon did frequently want to kill those whom they love best.

This will be a sad Christmas for all of us. Mingled with my own grief is the sorrow I feel for the parents of Jimmy Harmon.

—From Dorothy Ames's interview with Dr. R. Agnes Hartley.

fore he was joking and laughing and singing his own bright merry self again.

The thought of being deprived of the privilege of her company and the fact that she was little home, which was a haven to him when things went wrong, was to the dead to him are the things that prey on his mind Thursday night and prompted the killing. This is the only theory the only explanation that the girls' mother can work on.

"He wasn't jealous of Maude," she said. "He knew she didn't care for him. To Maude he was just her dear friend and comrade, the one who had carried her books to school, fought her childish battles and chummed with her in school and out.

"She often used to say he was homely as a hedge fence but that she forgot about that just because he was so good and jolly.

Mrs. Hartley is a remarkable woman. Her attitude toward the boy who killed her beloved daughter, is the finest thing I ever believed daughter is the finest thing I have known.

Mrs. Hartley is Spartan. She has seen sickness and sorrow and death and suffering. She has learned the wonderful secret of resignation. And as she talked to me of that whose little girl whose life was cut short just when it seemed the noblest and happiest, she was wonderful.

"I don't know how we are going to endure this," she said. "Maude was one of the dearest girls that ever lived. I don't say this because I'm her mother or because she's dead. I say it because she was. She was always popular, the centre and life of everything. One would never be sad or low-spirited where Maude was. She filled the very room with her high spirits and merriment and good spirits. She was indescribably, always having fun. She was innocent and gay as a child. She didn't care for the theatre. She didn't dance. All her amusements and her joys were those of a child.

Sorrow for Boy's Parents.

"You know I think it was a good thing that Jimmy's father didn't come here Friday. I felt very much against him that day. I felt that he hadn't taken the pains to understand his boy or to be sympathetic enough with him.

"He came to see me this morning. And when I saw his face—all the anguish and the heartache written there, when I saw that big strong man collapse on the stairs, a wave of pity swept over me. I was a mother,—he a father. Instead of hate and anger which had dwelt in me before I felt the common bond of grief.

"He said he was very grateful to me for the stand I have taken in regard to Jimmy, and he sobbed: 'Mrs. Hartley—you know where your daughter is—but with us, it is a living death.' He said that Jimmy's mother was too prostrated to come to see me yet. I pity them all. Jimmy has a dear good mother, whom he loves very much. I know it is very hard for her.

"The more I think of all the little things that happened the more convinced I am that Jimmy was stricken with acute insanity. It is a well known fact that people suffering that way always kill the person they like the best. It is never the people who harm them, or themselves, but the one who's dearest to them who is the victim of their disordered mind.

"Jimmy would never stand for anyone saying anything about Maude in any way, shape or manner. He was always her protector.

The Hartleys have a very comfortable home. It is hospitable and pleasant. Mrs. Hartley is a woman who believes in her girls entertaining their friends at home. All the crowd of boys and girls had the run of the house.

That Maude was unusually pretty and a girl of magnetic personality is the assertion of all who knew her. She was one of those sweet, wholesome girls who always dress in good taste and are fashionably neat in appearance.

Planned a Trip to Manchester.

The dead girl had planned to go to Manchester, N. H., Saturday. Her mother was making a pretty green broadcloth suit for her. Thursday afternoon she brought it home and began to trim a hat. She was so happy over her new clothes. She had looked forward to wearing them with such enthusiasm. The little girl lies embalmed in her little bedroom. The last trimmings are carefully laid on a chair.

Maude was so delighted with her new costume portion in the city," said Mrs. Hartley. "And she was looking forward to drawing her first week's pay with pride. Her employer has sent very comforting words of sympathy to me.

"When I look at her piano, it seems as though my heart would break. She played and sang so nicely and she danced very cleverly. I never saw a girl who was more full of life. My other daughter, Carrie, is just the opposite in looks and temperament to Maude. When they were little I used to say that I wished I could shake them up in a bag and have them come out, Carrie with a little more life and Maude with a little less.

"Yes, the funeral will be Sunday. Blair Horsman, Eddie Ulerman, Herold Woodman, the boy downstairs and Charley Newcombe, a neighbor, all Maude's best boy friends, will be the bearers.

"Rev. R. A. Gardner will conduct the Episcopal services. It will be brief and simple. I do not want any singing. I suppose all her little friends will be here. Poor Jimmy will be in his cell. I wonder if he will realize it all?"

When Christmas dawns there will no laughter, no merriment in either the Hartley or the Harmon home. It will be then just one week to a day of the pathetic tragedy. The little gifts that Maude had bought to give at Christmas will be distributed, but those that were bought for her will be laid away in sorrowful reverence.

And as the day will be for mothers and fathers, it will be for none for the poor fellow who will spend his Christmas day in jail.

I heard one woman, a neighbor, say "Tar and feathers would be too good for Jimmy Harmon,—this in anger to think of the little girl being cold in death in the house nearby.

But when I heard that dear mother talk of the boy, it was impossible not to agree with her.

I thought of what a mixture of insanity and tenderness there was in the boy who, unwilling to have the girl lie outside in the cold and snow, picked her up and ran the dead girl attended at Asbury

MEDICINE KILLS VICTIM OF MADMAN'S SHOT

Peter E. Fay Found Dead in Bed From Overdose of Drugs.

Auburn, Me., Dec. 18.—Mystery surrounds the death of Peter E. Fay, of Paley, as he was known here, who was found dead in bed. Fay was formerly of Brockton, Mass., and was shot in the head by Conover J. He died in the home of John Doherty, the man, who is alleged to have shot him. Doherty is now in an insane asylum.

The autopsy showed that the wound in Fay's head had nothing to do with his death, which was caused by an overdose of medicine. There will be no inquest held, according to the District Attorney.

CLEVELAND MUSEUM TO COST A MILLION.

Boston Architect May Aid in Designing Structure.

Cleveland, O., Dec. 19.—Ground will be broken in the Spring for the million-dollar Cleveland museum of arts, provided for by the Huntington, Kelley and Hurlburt trust fund. A model is being prepared by Hubbell & Benes, architects. The structure will be the finest, west of New York. The building will be erected in Wade Park upon the site given several years ago by Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wade. Hubbell & Benes will consult with Ed Howell Wheelwright, architect of the Boston Museum of Arts.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE DEAF

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—A celebrated New York Aurist has been selected to demonstrate to deaf people that deafness is a disease and can be cured rapidly and easily in your own home.

He proposes to prove this fact by sending to any person having trouble with their ears a trial treatment of this new method absolutely free. We advise all people who have trouble with their ears to immediately address Dr. Edward Gardiner, Suite 419, No. 40 West Thirty-third street, New York City, and they will receive by return mail, absolutely free, a Trial Treatment.

Common Sense And A Tablet

Do Away With Dyspepsia, Stomach Trouble and Make Meals a Pleasure.

When your stomach goes on a strike and mass meetings of indignation are held all over your body, then it is that you should sit up and take notice.

It is clearly and only a question of common sense—is this thing called Dyspepsia. Take away, by abuse, over eating, excesses and high living, the things which the stomach needs and you have dyspepsia and indigestion; then other maladies follow these—this is common sense.

The stomach is willing enough, but you won't let it do its work. You take away the materials which are so necessary for it to use.

Give back these materials and dyspepsia and indigestion flee and the whole machinery of man begins slowly to move and do its work.

What the stomach needs is nerve force, fluid in the digestive glands, nourishment and power. All these necessities it takes from the blood. If dyspepsia gives notice to the blood the blood gives nothing to the stomach.

This is common sense, also, pure, simple and unalloyed.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are common sense pressed by high power into tablets. In these tablets are powerful essences which go into the stomach, digest food, stop gas making, prevent decaying of food, enrich the gastric juices, are absorbed by the blood and thus give it strength to furnish a better fluid for digesting the next meal. Every physician knows what essences these tablets; every druggist has the same knowledge also. They are natural common sense digesters which do the work for the stomach quickly and well. ELECTRIC GIFT THINGS

Make Your Gift Something Different

THINGS ELECTRICAL POSSESS ALL THE DESIRABLE POINTS IN A GIFT--NOVELTY, BEAUTY, UTILITY AND ECONOMY

The more "different," beautiful and useful your gift, the more desirable you make it, and the longer the remembrance of your act will linger. Of course you want your Christmas token to be of this character.

An electrical gift belongs to this class and will bear with it all the credit for distinction in taste and the discerning thoughtfulness of the giver. Scores of appropriate appliances and novelties to select from. A wonderfully wide range of prices—from $3.00 to $50.00.

Holiday Sale of Electrical Novelties

Exhibited at The Edison Co.'s Display Rooms, 33 to 39 Boylston Street

She'll Welcome an Electric Iron

Just the thing! Turns out work quickly and is clean, safe and reliable. Does away with the inconvenience of heating irons on a stove. Saves time. Saves money. For an inexpensive Christmas gift you couldn't select a more desirable gift for the average housewife.

Electric Broilers

"The electric broiler is the only perfectly proper device for broiling" is the statement of sanitary experts. No gases and products of combustion to be absorbed by the meat, as in the case of fire broilers. Meats broiled on it are dressed with their own juices and butter is not required. Price $13.00.

Electric Waffle Irons

When waffles are cooked over a fire one side is done and then the other side—one may not cook as well as the other. In the Electric Iron BOTH sides cook at the same time—the waffle being made quicker, lighter and better. Price $7.50.

Christmas Lighting Sets (Candles on the Christmas tree are dangerous. Lighting sets are the only kind to use—danger is eliminated. Besides, the tree's appearance is much improved by their use.

8 Lamps $5.00
16 Lamps $8.50
24 Lamps $12.00

Electric Portable Stoves

Most every housewife can find use for one of these electric portable stoves. It is most convenient for anyone doing light housekeeping. It is free from all odor and soot and can be used without danger of fire, and does not heat up the room—all great advantages.

Electric Cigar Lighters

Cut down your match bill and at the same time have a very handsome library table accessory by securing an ELECTRIC CIGAR LIGHTER. One thousand lights for one cent is the cost! It is compact and simple in design. Price $2.50.

Electric Coffee Percolators

The modern way—the perfect way—of making coffee is through the agency of a percolator. The most convenient percolator is one heated by electricity. Delicious coffee can be prepared in a few minutes with it, right on the breakfast table. No flame, no alcohol to spill on polished tables. Prices $9.75 to $17.25.

Electric Nursery Milk Warmers

Electric Water Heaters

Save looking for matches, finding the proper vessel., a trip to the store—and they save money. If you have a gift to select, why not one of these. Just think of the pleasure it will afford the recipient. The cost is not great.

HUB NOBLY HEEDS CALL FOR BAKED BEAN RECIPES.

"Enough," Says Mrs. Austin of Batavia; But She Is Grateful to Thousands.

LETTER SENT TO AMERICAN

Choice Recipes for Currant Pies for All Who Responded to Appeal.

With unbegging loyalty to the untarnished credit of their beloved home city the men and women of Boston, who in the bean problem from Batavia, N. Y., harkened to the call of duty, have performed nobly.

Mrs. George J. Austin of No. 142 State street, Batavia, now knows how to cook beans. She knows, too, how to make brown bread.

If Mrs. Austin so chose—and if Mr. Austin would but stand for the demonstration—she could feed her husband three times a day for every remaining day of their existence on baked beans and brown bread, each meal prepared after a different formula and all supplied by Bostonians who responded to Mrs. Austin's appeal.

It is not extravagant to say that today Mrs. Austin knows how to cook Boston Baked Beans in more ways than any woman in the United States.

And with the collection proper of her unbounded aggregation of recipes is that each one is free only, comparatively, from the bottle, avoid-substitutes and take-no-other Boston Baked Bean prescription.

Variety Without Limit.

Mrs. Austin is bewildered with this infinite variety and overcome with grateful emotions for her unknown friends in Boston. Likewise she is amazed at the countless ways in which beans should be cooked, according to the advices received to obtain the best results.

Simply bubbling over and to a perspicuative of the Boston American in Batavia, yesterday, "that if Americus reached bean and cooked it in the fashion of every recipe I have received I have a pot of beans sufficient to feed the whole town and have at least two cans of green pods left over. I never saw anything like it in all my days."

"I have the Boston American to thank for this landslide of stuff which is left at my house every morning. I wrote a letter to Mayor Hibbard of Boston was published and the Boston American published its readers of their duty in exploiting Boston's staple by sending in recipes. I have been deluged by every mail."

Mrs. Austin paused for her story long enough to indite a letter, of which the following is a copy:

Batavia, New York, Dec. 19, 1908.
Editor Boston American, Boston, Mass.

Dear sir—I would be pleased to thank the kind ladies of Boston and His Honor Mayor Hibbard, through your valuable columns, for the kind and courteous manner in which they treated my recent communication in regard to baked beans and brown bread.

I listened to yesterday's mail and every letter received, and I wish to say that I would be pleased to furnish any of the Boston ladies with any recipe I may have.

Thanking you in advance for publishing this letter, I remain,

Yours respectfully,
MRS. GEORGE J. AUSTIN.

As further evidence of her appreciative gratitude, Mrs. Austin volunteered to swap all her bean information for the golden secret of what she knows about currant pie.

Now For Currant Pies.

Mrs. Austin is the wife of one of the leading jewelers of Batavia. She is known among her set as a model housekeeper. While she is an all-round adept in the culinary art, she prides herself particularly upon her currant pies. She says she will gladly send the recipe to any Boston woman who will write for it.

With great reluctance Mrs. Austin admitted that in all the avalanche of letters which had come to her there was but one chord struck which was at all untainted by the taint of the Tab. That letter was from Prof. D. D. Van Allen, M. A., of No. 28 Brimmer street, Boston.

Instead of sending the desired information, Prof. Van Allen declared that he had eaten beans in Boston and beans in Batavia and that he relished the Boston Batavian quite as much as the bean Bostonian, which utterance sounds suspiciously like heresy.

Among Mrs. Austin's other correspondents were Mrs. Mary W. Austin of Carver street, East Lexington; Miss Ethel M. Martin, of No. 34 Chancey street, East Boston; Mrs. Walter S. Palmer, of Dedham; Mrs. E. B. Copeland, of No. 7 Batavia street, Boston; Mrs. S. L. Smith, of No. 62 Bay street, Boston; Mrs. George H. McCoy, of No. 1 Concord square, Boston, and Mrs. Sarah E. Hill of No. 414 Washington street, Norwood, Mass.

There's a fine recipe for currant pie coming to each of those ladies, if they want it.

But Mrs. Austin of Batavia wants no more bean recipes. She has written "finis" on the bean pages of her cook book.

Sends Four Recipes.

Mrs. McCoy was kind enough to inclose two recipes for each of the desired articles. The recipes given by her mother-in-law are as follows:

(1) Take all kinds of broken cake and doughnuts and scald to soften, cup of wheat flour, two cups of gray corn meal, cup of molasses, cup of hot water, one and one-half teaspoons of soda, salt to suit.

(2) Cup of wheat flour, cup of graham flour, two cups of corn meal, cup of molasses, cup of cold water, one and one-half teaspoons soda, salt to suit, steam for five hours. Raisins may be added if desired.

For the beans, Mrs. McCoy offers this:

Take two quarts California or York beans, three dessert spoons of sugar, two and one-half dessert spoons of salt, one dessert spoon dry mustard, one-half dessert spoon of pepper, one small onion and one and one-half pounds of mixed salt pork. This will make four quarts of beans.

Mrs. McCoy tells of another way to make the celebrated Boston bean as follows: Wash and pick the beans, put an onion in the bottom of a kettle and then put the beans in, add the seasoning and then the pork, which should be scored, cover all with cold water and boil two hours and add water as needed, but avoid boiling over. Bake two hours and uncover to take.

Used for Forty Years.

Mrs. S. E. Hill of Norwood gives two recipes that she has used for forty years. She says:

"Take a bean pot bulging out at the sides and small at the top. Carefully pick one quart of pea beans, soak over night in cold water, drain the water off in the morning and cover with fresh cold water, cook until the skins crack, but do not let them get mushy.

"Take a fork or a spoon and blow on them. If the skins crack they are done. Scald and pound or a little more than a pound pork and score it; put in the middle of beans, only leaving out the rind. Add two tablespoons of molasses, a teaspoon of salt and one of dry mustard; fill up the pot with boiling water.

"Bake six or eight hours or rather slowly. Cover at first, remove the cover the last hour. Fill up with boiling water as it cooks away, but do not have too much water at first.

To make the celebrated soul bread Mrs. Hill says that the following recipe is very good: Take two cups graham, grated Indian meal, cup of rye meal, cup of molasses, three cups of sour milk, one heaping teaspoon of salt. Steam in a five-pound lard pail for three or four hours.

Handed Down By Grandmother.

"I have used for forty years those recipes for baked beans and brown bread," said Mrs. Hill last night.

"Why do you consider them the best?" she was asked.

"I consider them the best from long experience and the satisfactory results they have always given me. My grandmother used to bake the beans in an old brick oven and used the same recipe. This was handed down in the family to my mother, who gave it to me. You have to be careful in cooking beans and when you have used a recipe for years, which you know to be all right, you don't want to change it for some new notion declaring that you find in a cook book."

"I don't think you can learn how to cook beans from a book. The young housekeeper would be better off if she talked with some one who has had experience. . . . Just as soon as I read the recipes in the American how to bake beans I thought at once of somebody just beginning housekeeping and wanting a good recipe for baking beans.

"There is no better than mine. It has satisfied my husband for years, and he thinks nobody can cook beans like my wife. The old-fashioned style of cooking is better than some of these new ideas that you read about, and I think you can't improve on my way of cooking beans."

COMMISSION PLANS TO RESTORE OLD SEA GLORY TO SALEM PORT.

TO BUILD 4 GREAT PIERS

Improvement of Waterfront Includes Reclaiming of Thousands of Acres.

To regain for Salem the commerce that was once her pride and glory, but which spread its white wings and sailed away in the sun of a commission on prominent business men of that city, who will this week present to the City Council plans calling for the improvement and development of the harbor and waterfront.

The project, as outlined in advance by members of the commission, calls for the construction at once of four to six immense piers. Each of these piers will be 1,400 feet long, and will be capable of berthing at one time six ocean liners.

The plans are but in a rough stage as yet, but they provide for a gigantic system of development that if put into effect will regain for the Witch city its once proud prestige of being one of the greatest ports in the country.

The commission which drew up the plans consists of the following: William S. Felton and George W. Pilsbury, representing the Salem Board of Trade; John D. H. Gauss and Leland H. Cox, representing the Merchants' Association, and Robert C. Schmidt, commissioner appointed by the Mayor. The chairman is Mr. Felton, the secretary Lyman C. Smith and the chief engineer Guy W. Bicker.

Plan Nearly Ten Years Old.

The attempt to improve Salem's water front dates back nearly ten years, when the Hon. David M. Little, former Mayor of Salem, drew up rough plans of a scheme which he had been laboring on for years. The proper push and enthusiasm was lacking, however, and nothing came of the plans.

This year, however, the Salem Board of Trade, comprising practically every business man in the city, took up the matter and adopted resolutions calling for a definite plan of action. The report to be filed this week with the City Council is the direct result of the action taken by the Board of Trade.

The plans, it is understood, not only call for the conversion of the harbor in an up-to-modern plans, but the development of thousands of acres of practically valueless land and the reclamation of a large tract of flats. The project, if carried out, will make Salem the railroad centre north of Boston, and will give a direct rail and water route to Lowell, Lawrence and other cities in Northern New England.

Salem as a commercial centre once led the entire country. Its vessels were the first to carry the American flag to St. Petersburg, Zanzibar, Sumatra, Calcutta, Bombay, Batavia, Africa, Madagascar and Australia. The strange and thrilling adventures of her ship masters make a story which even the imaginings of romance could hardly parallel.

Salem' Skippers Famous.

The commerce of Salem reached its zenith from the close of the Revolutionary War to the embargo preceding the War of 1812. During that period her ships penetrated the ports of every foreign country, and brought home the offerings of many climes. Salem captains of those days were bold and adventurous, many shipmasters not being content to follow in the footsteps of their predecessors, but venturing to the Cape of Good Hope and the far distant Indies. The commercial relations of England and France with that empire impelled the countries of the East.

Triumphant on the seas, Salem, as a commercial centre, gradually declined. But before the decline it had placed her name as a seaport and a motto which is serving as a prophecy to the present commission. It is "To the farthest port of the rich East."

WONDERFUL OPPORTUNITY NOW CONFRONTS SALEM

BY JOHN H. GAUSS.

Delegate to Rivers and Harbors Congress and member of Commission on Development of Salem Waterfront.

Commencing just to the left of the present Lehigh & Wilkesbarre pier, at what was formerly the site of Welsh's wharf, or White's wharf in earlier days, a dock perhaps 1,500 feet long could be built, which would be sufficiently long to make four berths for a modern vessel on either side. The dock would be sufficiently wide to allow for proper sheds, a railroad track and a roadway for teams.

Proper railroad connection could be made with the Boston & Maine Railroad, which has a spur track running to the head of the old wharf, which is on Derby street. This track could be easily extended to the new dock, which is next to and to the other piers and slips that might be built later in this way.

No difficulties would arise over the establishment of a railroad terminal, for the track would run along the ends of the present established street.

It is thought that the development plan can be commenced in this way for a modest expenditure of money, and year by year the work extended.

Large Tracts of Flats.

There is a sufficiently large area of flats from this point to Derby wharf, so that four or five piers could be built, and in addition there would be a large area of valuable property which the docks would open along the shore front, for if all the flats are filled in the same proportionate rate as the present valuation of the property above the present dock, it will be possible to carry through the dock project and make that will be available at a very moderate price per foot for manufacturing purposes.

This result will be brought about by the use of the material for filling that will be obtained by the modern methods of dredging.

No serious problems confront the proposed improvement. Mechanically it is a simple undertaking, merely the construction of piers and then the removal of the flats beyond to furnish the required depth.

SPIRIT OF TRAGEDY IN STRANGE STORY OF VARNEY AND LOOTED BANK.

HIS PREDECESSOR SLAIN

Somersworth Man's First Experience Was in a Bank That Was Wrecked.

Somersworth, N. H., Dec. 19.—The strangest story in New England today is the one which centres around Fred M. Varney, self-confessed cleaner of the $85,000 shortage on the books of the First National Bank of Somersworth.

Fate's prankish hand is strangely discernible throughout this unusual bank theft.

One coincident worthy of passing notice is that this is the second bank shortage in which Varney has been a figure, although he had nothing to do with the first—the wrecking of the Dover Five Cents Savings Bank in 1895.

Varney was a clerk in this bank. Its cashier was Isaac F. Abbott, who, after embezzling nearly $100,000, committed suicide.

Another co-incident of the unhappy shadow over the First National Bank of Somersworth, is that the man, whom Varney succeeded as cashier, an aged and trusted man, was murdered. He was struck down and his throat cut by a criminal, who had spent weeks in planning the attack for purposes of robbery.

Whence comes, ask the astounded people of Somersworth today, the spirit of evil and misfortune which seems to have spread its spell over the Somersworth bank and its cashiers?

Shades of Dead Cashier.

Are the restless shades of old Joseph Stickney, who was murdered, and of Isaac Abbott, the embezzler-suicide, wandering restless?

This orderly and God-fearing little city today stands paralyzed in amazement as the result of Varney's arrest and confession.

How could Varney have spent the money, and what temptations could be has found in Somersworth, are baffling problems to the citizens.

"In speculation," is Varney's laconic answer to the question of his downfall. He goes into no details. He doesn't say in what stocks he sank the funds of his institution.

The townspeople accept his answer as truth, for there are no witnesses that the defaulter spent the money on luxurious living at home.

Varney is thirty-nine years old. He is married and has one child, a son of ten years. He has been a resident of Somersworth for eleven years and was one of the most prominent young men of the city. He was a member of many fraternal organizations and had served the city two years as city treasurer.

Varney did not live ostentatiously. He received a salary of $2,500 from the bank, out of which he was required to pay two assistants. It was known to his friends that he was deeply interested in the stock market. In fact it would take a list of the stocks practically all the time, it is said, that there was nothing to show that he was involved beyond his means in any speculation.

The Discovery.

The detection of Varney's wrongdoing followed the visit of National Bank Examiner Sloan of Manchester, one of the old the gum shoe methods of bank examiners, swooped down upon the concern and took its books for inspection just when it was least expected.

As soon as he realized the condition of the bank, Examiner Sloan summoned United States Marshal Eugene P. Nute of Farmington and United States Deputy Attorney T. E. Holt of Nashua, and Varney was arrested after his arrest, according to the statement of W. S. Tolles, president of the bank, Varney made a confession, admitting that he had taken the large sum from the bank which had been lost in speculation. He said that in his examinations and in the straightening of the affairs of the institution. There was no bank funds to be found, and Varney, one of an offender nodding in the unconcerning of his wrong deeds.

Examiner Bean has not revealed the method employed by Varney in covering up the defalcations for six years, but it is understood from other sources that he employed two sets of books, one of which was submitted to the examiner on his visits to the bank, and the other kept by the cashier privately.

Varney, who has been appointed temporary receiver for the bank, said today that he believed the concern was solvent, despite the large shortage.

REV. COOK APPEALS IN VAIN FOR FUNDS

Floretta Whaley's Grandmother Is Willing to Take Her Home.

New York, Dec. 19.—Jere Knode Cook, who, when pastor of St. George's church, Stuyvesant square, ran away with his ward, Floretta Whaley, to day separated once more to Mrs. Kaidah Whaley, the girl's grandmother, for funds. Mrs. Whaley was inexorable, even though Lawyer William Ennerson, of Hartford, pleaded eloquently with her, saying her granddaughter was practically destitute. Mrs. Whaley said she would not give a cent toward supporting Cook, but that if the young woman wished to rejoin him in California to her fatherland home, she would be welcomed.

Members of the Country Life Commission Listening to Optimistic Messages From Farmers of New England at State House Hearing

LABOR PROTESTS SALE OF CRUSHER

Vice-President Murphy of Central Labor Union Disapproves Commission's Advice.

Vice-President Michael A. Murphy, of the Boston Central Labor Union, yesterday disapproved the recommendation of the Finance Commission to the Mayor that the city stone crushers be sold and that crushed stone be bought from contractors. He said that the Commission should have suggested reforms under public ownership that will prevent waste and not to "hand it over for the exploitation of a private company."

In speaking of the city crusher and the Finance Commission's recommendation, Vice-President Murphy said:

"The policy of his American Federation of Labor as a national movement, and of the Boston Central Labor Union and its affiliated unionsas a local movement, is pledged to the principle of public ownership.

Evils Could Be Remedied.

"The private ownership of these stone-crushing plants, which have in the past furnished crushed material for the city, is to be regretted, and it will be practically impossible to make the members of organized labor believe that existing evils in the management of these crushers will not be remedied under the ownership of the city.

"The Finance Commission without doubt received proof that a private corporation could furnish material at a lower price than the material is now being furnished the city by its own plants, is it not possible that economies could be introduced into our own plants that would offset the claims made by the private contractors?

"I believe that it has been proven that after a public utility passes from the control of a monopoly into that of a public service corporation, an improvement in service is made, and the private corporation company has gotten in absolute control of the situation, conditions change, cost to the municipality increases and a decreasing efficiency takes the place of the temporary increased benefits.

"Public Calamity."

"It needs no proof other than what is commonly known to show that the private corporation produces at a reduced cost by cutting the wages of the employees and increasing the hours of labor. This slowly but surely results in their losing their best men and in the decreased efficiency of those who remain.

"It is a public calamity to turn a public utility over to a private corporation with the resulting loss to the community of a well paid set of employees.

"The Finance Commission, instead of proposing the giving away of another fat job to a private corporation, should have suggested reforms to have been tested under public ownership before condemning the entire business. It makes no odds what the line of work may be, if base motives creep into a department it will show in the end, especially by increased costs. The way to change this is to inspire a system that will prevent waste and not to hand it over for the exploitation of a private company."

BUTTERFLY BAZAAR BY DORCHESTER PARISH

Virginia Street Universalists Have Three-Day Festival.

The annual Butterfly Bazaar, given by the members of the Virginia Street Universalist Church, Upham's Corner, Dorchester, on Thursday, Friday and yesterday afternoons and evening, will be held, as intended. The proceeds of the fair are to be used for church purposes.

The booths were all beautifully decorated in green and white, with holly, evergreen and laurel, each table standing under the weight of Christmas good things. The pretty young ladies in charge of the different booths dressed in white with caps to match, looked like fairies.

Thursday evening was known as "Craft and Magic Night," the entertainment being by Prof. Rowell, assisted by eight "Oriental Night" the program consisting of songs, dances, and a modern parade. Saturday evening was called "Social Night" the entertainment consisting of music and singing.

Auburn Outing Club Election.

SALISBURY BEACH COTTAGERS IN WAR

Summer Residents to Ask Legislature to Name New Town.

Declaring that they have not been treated fairly by the town of Salisbury in the matter of improvements and protection of their property, the Summer residents of Salisbury Beach have organized and will petition the next session of the Legislature to have the beach separated from the town of Salisbury and hereafter be known as the town of Cushing.

The Cushing Beach Improvement Association, composed of property owners along the beach, is taking up the fight for separation in a vigorous manner and is circulating petitions among the residents of the beach.

Secretary A. J. Brissette of the Cushing Beach Improvement Association, in discussing the contemplated change, said:

"Our bill petitioning the Legislature for a separation will be filed next Tuesday. We have failed to get a just proportion of improvements at the beach, and it was due to the fact that we had no fire protection that eighty-two buildings at the beach were burned on Oct. 27, entailing a loss of $115,000. Only two weeks ago there was another fire which wiped out twelve more buildings.

"The Salisbury Beach Land oCmpany has volunteered to give to the new town such land as it needs for public buildings or necessary improvements, and I am convinced that when this movement is successful, as it must be, Salisbury Beach will be as popular as a place for Summer residences as it deserves to be.

"The officers of the Cushing Beach Improvement Association are: Edward L. Taylor, chairman, real estate dealer, No. 1 Winsor street, Haverhill; A. J. Brissette, treasurer, 5 Winsor street, No. 41 Vine street, Newburyport; C. F. Allen, treasurer, secretary, 5 Winsor street, N. Hook, painter, of Haverhill; Stephen Lanen, insurance agent, of South Groveland, and George W. Rowell, real estate dealer, of Amesbury.

MAXIM DELAYS RIFLE-SILENCER DEAL WITH U. S.

Springfield Arisnal Official Ask for More Severe Tests.

Springfield, Dec. 19.—According to Colonel Stanhope E. Blunt, commandant at the United States armory, the government will not take no further steps relative to testing the new gas-escape rifle with a silencer until Percy Hiram Maxim, inventor of the device, shows up in this city in readiness for further tests. Mr. Maxim's manufacturing device, which he claims will partly do away with the noise resulting from the discharge of a rifle, will be placed on the market early in January.

Meanwhile Mr. Maxim has made no further effort to have the government adopt it.

Tests were made here several months ago by officers of the armory. Mr. Maxim fitted the silencer to one of the army magazine rifles, according to those who saw the tests, they were satisfactory.

SCOUT CRUISERS READY FOR LONG TEST VOYAGE

Uncle Sam to Send New Vessels to Azore Islands.

Newport, R. I., Dec. 19.—The three scout cruisers, which will be seen here for a time during the Summer, preparatory their trial trip to the Azore Islands and return, now lying off the New York navy yard look more than ever like torpedo boat destroyers when viewed from a distance. There is a similarity in their models, being constructed largely for speed, the engine and bobber compartments occupying a large portion of the space on deck.

The Birmingham and Salem are in three weeks and the Chester is at the New York, having completed her preliminary trials and now undergoing minor repairs. The Salem will remain here for trials when the weather is suitable, while the Birmingham will prepare for similar trials. On the Birmingham's first effort her bobbers proved defective, but on her recent trip out they gave good account of themselves. While the speed of the craft was a trifle under that made by the Salem, which has turbine engines, it is expected that for economy of coal consumption she will surpass the Salem on the long test cruise.

COMPLETES QUARTER CENTURY AS PRIEST

Fr. Butler, Temperance Leader, to Observe Anniversary at Christmas Mass.

Though he completes twenty-five years as a priest next Tuesday morning, Rev. Francis J. Butler, pastor of St. Leo's Catholic Church, Esmond street, Dorchester, will not take official cognizance of the fact until Christmas Day, when he will celebrate high mass at 11 o'clock.

Several plans had been made by the parishioners to honor their pastor, among them being their raising of a substantial purse. At Father Butler's request the collection of funds for a purse was abandoned, as he considered such an undertaking at this time of year a burden on his good people, and he desired only their affection and co-operation.

The teachers and members of the Sunday school connected with the church were also preparing to give Father Butler a suitable remembrance, but this was also given up to comply with the wishes of the pastor.

Father Butler was one of the founders and the first president of the Catholic Total Abstinence Society. He has been connected with St. Leo's Church for nearly five years, having taken up the work of Rev. Edward C. McGoldrick, first pastor of the church.

Father Butler has done much to improve the condition of the poor. His efforts in the cause of religion has been rewarded with success. He was born in East Cambridge January 23, 1850, graduating from the Cambridge Grammar School. Entering Boston College he received his diploma from that institution in 1880. The following Fall he went to Montreal where he entered the Grand Seminary, taking his three years' course. He was ordained December 22, 1883.

After his ordination he returned to Boston and took up his work as a curate at the Church of the Sacred Heart, East Cambridge, where he stayed for six years. Receiving a leave of absence Rev. Archbishop Williams for one year he took a post graduate course at the Catholic University at Washington and on resuming duty in Boston was assigned to St. Columbkille's church, Brighton. Leaving there in May, 1904, he was appointed pastor of St. Leo's Church.

NEWTOWNE CLUB PLAYERS IN "THE ROSE OF INDIA"

Cambridge Organization Will Produce an Opera by Hill and Scott.

The Newtowne Club, of Cambridge, will have a new opera, "The Rose of India," for its annual theatrical production. The work of Charles P. Scott and Stanton Hill, composer and author of "The Silver Thread," presented last Winter. The dates are February 5 to 8, inclusive.

The scene is laid in a British India hill-town, with a native temple close by. A hustling rug buyer from New York, in search for a treasure in his line, affords the leading comedian ample opportunity for fun. Although the leading performers are humorous others are thrilling.

The plot is a love story.

The piece will be carefully staged and the costuming will be elaborate. The dress and garb of the natives, English regulars, British soldiers and Hindoos will give it color.

MARINES EXPECT TO GO TO HAYTI

Portsmouth, Dec. 19.—In anticipation of an order transferring them to Hayti, the big squad of marines at the Portsmouth navy yard have been put to strenuous drill every day by Major Henry Leonard of the United States naval prison, who says that he will have the marine army in a high state of efficiency and strict discipline. A recent tramp of 22 miles to York, Maine, and back was one of the first moves of its kind ever made by any marine officer in command of the five hundred men at Portsmouth navy yard. Major Leonard has the finest battalion at any naval station in the country.

PEOPLE PRAY FOR WORLD PEACE

Churches of All Denominations Unite in Good Will Services To-day.

Peace Sunday will be observed to-day in churches of all denominations throughout the State of Massachusetts, and in various other sections of the country, for the purpose of laying strongly before all people the aims of the international peace movement.

Explaining the significance of the day and the steps which led up to its observance, Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood, general secretary of the American Peace Society, said yesterday:

"In 1890 the Peace Congress was established in London with the view of securing a concerted action on the part of clergymen of all denominations in the promotion and practice of peace.

Increasing Throughout the World.

"The results have been very satisfactory in England, as many as 20,000 addresses having been delivered on the subject in one year. In the countries of Continental Europe the practice is increasing, as well as in mission fields, especially in Japan.

"On account of the great extent of the United States, it has been difficult to secure anything like a universal observance of the day in this country, but this year the American Peace Society, through more than 200 religious journals, has urged its universal observance throughout the nation and the indications are that it will be much more widely observed than ever before.

"It is expected that the observance of the day, this year, will lay strong emphasis on the successful work of the second Hague conference and upon the desirability of the appointment by the governments, of the importance of the steps taken there.

"To-day in the churches clergymen will have the opportunity to apply the lessons of friendship and good will to the international life and to enlarge on the growing interdependence of the nations in matters both of peace and war. The object of the people as shown by the recent congresses for the promotion of general education, free trade, the cultivation and people of foreign countries and the care of tributaries.

There will be services in every city and town in the State to-day. Of these, one of the most important will be that which has been arranged by Dr. Alexander Mann, rector of Trinity Church, who has invited ex-Speaker Nelson Aldrich and Associate Justice John S. Stiness of Rhode Island College Lawrence to take part in the proceedings of the American Peace Society and Dr. Stiness has written and spoken effectively on peace and arbitration.

SALVATION ARMY TO FEED CAMBRIDGE POOR

1,000 Christmas Baskets Ready for Homes of Poverty.

The Salvation Army of Cambridge will feed 1,000 poor people in that city Christmas. Plans have been perfected by Adjutant W. B. Sowers for the distribution of the baskets. The assistant charities of the city have been in co-operation with the Salvation Army and the city has been thoroughly canvassed.

The Salvation Army will distribute baskets from its hall, No. 231 Massachusetts avenue, Christmas Eve, from 10 to 12 o'clock Christmas morning. Each basket will contain a chicken, a loaf of bread, one-half pound of butter, one pound of sugar, one-half pound of tea, one pound of coffee, a can of corn, a can of tomatoes, potatoes, onions, apples, cranberries and a plum pudding.

Riverside Boat Club Officers.

The Riverside Boat Club of Cambridge has elected the following officers: President, Fred Hyrne; vice-president, Robert McKinley; secretary, John J. Toomey; treasurer, Cornelius Sullivan; financial secretary, Frank Dardis; captain, Timothy Finn.

NEW ENGLAND'S FARMERS FACE PROSPEROUS FUTURE.

Tide of Prosperity Setting From City to Country, President's Commission Hears.

BUMPER CROPS RAISED

Old Libels About Abandoned Farms Refuted by Enthusiastic Agriculturists.

BY GEORGE H. GORDON.

TALK no more of the abandoned farms of New England. Let the pessimist who errs about that the old Yankee tribe is dying out, that the lands have fallen into alien hands be still. Cease the chatter about impoverished soils, about buildings racked and ruined, about the heedless drift of the boys and girls urbanward. Let us hear less talk of the bonanza farms of the Far West and see some of the lands which bear bumper crops right at our doors with the enormous advantage of the finest markets of the world.

President Roosevelt's Commission on Country Life heard all this at an inspiring session ending its week of investigation at the State House and when it had concluded the commissioners were unanimous in their expressions of surprise at the revelations They said they had received magnificent testimony at their hearing in Springfield the day before, but the note of optimism which was sounded by the farmers and granges of Eastern Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine, of which more than a hundred as individual farmers and delegates from agricultural societies testified was almost unbelievable. Everyone insisted that every problem which seems so difficult, not only can be solved, but is working toward a complete solution now, and every bogey that has been advanced to prove that the grand old Yankee spirit of these New England States has been crushed out of the farmers was banished like a Cape Cod fog before a gale.

That there are problems to be met was generally conceded, but all are being met in that spirit which knows no despair. The trouble is all with the people not the land.

Praises "Alien" Farmers.

The cry that has been raised against the foreigners crowding out the native was completely disposed of. Governor Eben Draper declared they not only make good citizens but better farmers than the native stock, while F. S. Adams, best Man and Baby Dairyman in Massachusetts declared that whatever the first generation is, he wanted no better Americans, for the children of French and other nationalities who have come into his State are, in this matter, his said, they were relatively as small and were as progressive as others that they make no problem, as many have feared.

Detailed to the commission are Dr. E. W. Allen of the United States Department of Agriculture, who is executive secretary to the board; Dr. C. W. Stiles of the United States Marine Hospital, the sanitary expert of the commission; H. Blanchard of Minnesota, of the United States Bureau of Soils, who has been detailed to the commission, and J. A. Rice of Michigan as stenographer.

The trouble with New England farms is not that the land is worn out and abandoned. The land is good, can be made better and will be. The trouble is that the majority of the people than the best possible use is not made of the opportunities right in our schools, prices fixed in the newspapers, and the markets of the world brought to live mainly by which to make great fortunes, that is the point which is being met. Young men may hope to find a great prize, have given cause for what they consider failure, but the wonders are beginning to see that while the great prizes are in the offing great majority of moderate prizes, the prizes that all may enjoy, make the difference between the farms and that right here in New England are the real successes are much the same as elsewhere.

Trend Turns From

Education in New [illegible] old to and the farm. Fathers and mothers particularly the mothers, knowing how hard they have had to work, make their children go to the city to seek their fortunes, as they believe escape from drudgery such as they have had. But a new and growing public consciousness of New England farm boy that life in a good country home, and working for a wage kept down to the point of subsistence, and a little more, the long periods of idleness, the driving of employers, with little chance to rise in life. Then, too, the introduction into New England of many improved machinery, the clearing up of stones and the building up of the soil have made farming possible under modern conditions all work for a change of the trend towards the farm.

It was refreshing to hear the [illegible] of the New England farmer what he can do. It is Connecticut which raises the finest tobacco, it is Vermont which leads in potatoes, cream, apples, sweet corn, while in Aroostook County, in that State alone not less than 7,000 acres of which is to be devoted to the growing of seed potatoes. Maine has already 1,000 acres of which was planted to an enormous crop last year. President Roosevelt sent his commission through the country to find out what could be done to keep the young people on the farms. They have held meetings in every State and have had more than 100,000 replies to circulars issued.

All United on Two Demands.

Some of the questions they have asked were about the farm homes, whether they are as good as they should be, the training for farm life in the schools, whether farmers get proper returns for produce of

CHAPTER I.

Courtship of Jacques Brachard

ANGELIS HALL, queen of the salons, attending the greetings of the streets of Marseilles for a few pen ves, raised his eyes to the impassive little daughter of the Marquise d'Andeline as he vigorously resumed the way for her dainty hoofs, and his life began anew.

Anne-Marie, walking gracefully ahead of her governess, did not see Jacques, which was a good business he was very grubby and dirty, and dressed in rough clothes.

But there was an expression in the boy's face strongly set, which Anne-Marie was to know after years of suffering and hardship, that might afterward make recognized his appearance in his grave hands, his dirty face and his industriously ragged clothes from the best pride. For Anne-Marie, whose family was one of the four richest in France, and one of the four most powerful, families in France, was she not? was Jacques Brachard, the fisherman's

There on that day, and it never left his memory expanding soul—a desire. He took it with him when he went to sleep on a pile of straw in the infested garret in the Thieves' Corner. It stirred his dreams and was with him when he awoke and he found himself thinking of things that had been pushed from his boy's mind.

When he was at school, because he was dirtier and more ragged than any of the other boys, the boys bullied and cursed him until he turned upon them with the fear and rage of an animal, at day in the harbor and, his harder muscles, whipped them into respect for his strength.

That was a primitive method which had presented no problem to his mind. In his career he was to discover a more difficult cunning of his class into play to wrest pennies from.

A Man and His Purpose.

Now there stirred in him, first the desire to see Anne-Marie again, which was easy to do; for he was hanging about her house always, which was difficult then the reasons for overcome whatever obstacles might lay between them. And, second, a purpose.

As long as Anne-Marie remained in Marseilles, Jacques Brachard knew, day after day and she never saw him. When she went away he could begin preparing for years and went to work on the docks, where he could earn more money, and he could begin and saved and grew to be master of the man he served with.

He never stopped thinking, and the problem that his brain struggled to solve was how to make money.

He had learned that all things may be bought for good coin, fish, social positions, even a beautiful wife. It was on that way only that he might win Anne-Marie, and he resolved to begin the fight for her. He would make a different pile of it beside her, even to her own height, if that should be his purpose.

When he reached the stature of manhood Jacques Brachard was a tall, powerful and lean as a Winter wolf, with the strength of a dock laborer, but with an awkward, loosely swinging arms and his wide muscle-hidden shoulders.

His short brown hair was stiff and unattractive. His eyes were deep-set, under his coal, under his shelving, bushy eyebrows. He was restless, nervous, although but the embodiment of relentless purpose and power.

He was such a man when he appeared in Paris after more than ten years, and began the worship of Anne-Marie; a decade of courtship that was a battle to the death for her. And Paris hailed him as the man who brought with him the most money.

He began the development of wonderful Egyptian copper mines, and became a partner of the world of finance and the richest man in France, while all the time he was climbed to wealth along the easy slopes he polished out to them.

Wins a Wife, but Not Love

Then he married Anne-Marie d'Andeline, who took him because her haughty, imperious mother keeped on her knees for a wealthy son-in-law. And she loathed him with all her heart because he was rich and uncouth, and she knew that he had bought her, just as he had bought the most splendid mansion, once owned by a dead and happily forgotten nobleman, to which he transported her, his bride.

There Jacques Brachard learned that his wife hated him, because he told him so, and told him why; and he loved her so much that he pitied her, as he had never pitied anyone, not even those whose forehead he took, in their dying hour, and left her to her own ways.

To her own ways were added to the insidious promptings of a man of her class, Jerome de Govain, whom she had known always. The Marquise de Govain was the great-type of a Parisian nobleman. He was insolvable, unscrupulous, and he had begun his with sword and pistol and courageous with gallantry, and had been a pauper, devoted but upon the bounty of a woman whom he grossly deceived, until the tragedy in his pair upon Jacques Brachard and made money in Egyptian copper.

Now, to add interesting complexities to the existence which Jacques began to make secret love to his wife.

Jacques Brachard was writing gravely in his drawing-room for Anne-Marie to finish dressing for her mother's reception and ball. He thought of her as she would and pared up and down the softly carpeted floor. He was thinking, and his dark brows were drawn together. His eyes were fixed on the floor, and his head, with his big, awkward body seemed at war with the beautiful apartment.

Anne-Marie entered. She had never more resembled the portrait of her girlhood so far as beauty went. She was tall, dark, with the rich, warm coloring of the Orient in her oval face. She did not trouble to look at her husband when she said casually:

"Good-evening. Have I kept you waiting?"

"Good evening; there is no hurry," Brachard answered. "I shall have to leave you at the theatre to-night and come home to clothes. I take the 11:59 train for London."

FACTS ABOUT THE HAIR.

Simple Method of Washing That Removes Dust and Disease Germs.

The air is full of floating dust, dirt and disease germs, which settle upon everything. There is a constant fall upon your head that holds the dust fast, and in a short time you have dandruff and scalp trouble. The pores of the scalp are stopped up, the hair roots get no nourishment, and then your hair begins to fall out. It is not such a simple matter that a child can see that cleanliness is the one and the only thing needful. Don't waste time on tonics, renewers, invigorators or hair growers. You need Birt's Head Wash, which will put your hair and scalp in a healthy, natural condition, and you ought to use it at least once a week. It puts the scalp in such healthy shape that tad-ol, Hiflesse Hair Tonic regains its natural color, and the hair of all who use it takes on a soft, silky gloss and sheen that every man and woman so much admires. There is no alcohol in Birt's Head Wash, as alcohol is said to make hair turn gray prematurely. Birt's Head Wash is made of Refined Soap, Cochin Cocoanut Oil, White of Eggs, Glycerin and Salicylic Acid. There are no other things than these known for cleansing the hair and scalp, and any doctor or druggist will tell you so if you ask him. Price 50 cents.

"Very well; I'll order a motor car to come for me," she said indifferently. "You do not ask the reason for my going away."

"I assume that it is excellent; your reasons usually are."

"This is my first journey away from you since our marriage," he went on, "and it gives me a strange sensation."

"I shall not complain of your absence, Monsieur," she said coldly. "Had we not better go? The motor is waiting."

Brachard nodded and led the way down the wide stairway and out through the hall to the porte-cochere, where their automobile was standing.

Anne-Marie drew away from his touch as he assisted her into the carriage, and settled herself in a corner as far from her husband as she could get. Brachard took the other corner, and they sped in silence toward the mansion of the Marquis and Marquise d'Andeline, her father and mother.

Anne-Marie found herself thinking of Govain. She would see him to-night at her mother's. He must know of Brachard's intended departure for London. It was to be her first sight of Govain, on the night that both she and Govain had longed for, while he told her of his love and she dared believe she loved him. Perhaps—

"I beg your pardon," her husband said "It is nothing."

Brachard suddenly hissed with anger.

"Must you always recoil from me as if my touch were leprosy?" he demanded. "Are you always to be like this, Anne-Marie?" he added, more softly.

"Let us not renew the old discussion," she begged, wearily. "I am tired to death."

"I do not wish to annoy you, Marie, but this perpetual coldness is inhuman. If I am so utterly distasteful to you, how could you marry me?"

"How, indeed?"

The automobile swung into a driveway and stopped under the porte-cochere of the d'Andeline mansion. A footman opened the door and Brachard got out, stepping aside to make room for his wife, who gathered her clothing about her and together they entered the drawing room, which already was humming with the chatter of guests gathered there and in the adjoining card rooms.

"Hello, Jacques!" Marie cried Max, her younger brother, an irrepressible youth, kissing her hand with the affectionate, corner-crowned brotherliness.

The Marquise d'Andeline hurried up to stop Max's boisterous greetings.

"Good evening, dear," she said, kissing Anne-Marie and holding out her hand to Jacques. "I am so glad you both could come."

"Govain Will Have to Amuse Me"

"Jacques cannot stay," Anne-Marie said, receiving her mother's effusive kiss on her cheek.

"No; I only brought Marie and now I must return," Brachard explained. "I leave for London to-night at 11:59."

"You will make a great deal. But we saw in the newspapers that you were going on some big railroad project, so we are not much hurt, Jacques."

"I shall return to say good-bye, Jacques," Anne-Marie said, holding out her hand to Marie."

"You shall not need you," she replied quickly. "I see Jerome Le Govain there in the card room. I must go and speak to him."

Taking her brother's arm, Anne-Marie walked toward the card room. The Marquise turned to Jacques, and Brachard was left alone, standing awkwardly beside the door. He followed after his wife as Govain advanced to meet her, then stepped quickly and went out to his automobile.

CHAPTER II.

The Temptation of Anne-Marie

THE Marquise d'Angeline hurried after Anne-Marie when she saw that Brachard had gone, and intercepted her before she reached the door of the card room. The boisterous Max gladly relinquished his attempt to kiss his left her for the more congenial pastime of bridge in the adjoining room, while she turned with a plainly bored expression.

"Dear Anne-Marie, I haven't had a word with you," her mother began. "Jacques will return soon?"

"Yes."

"You will soon be a widow."

"A widow?" Anne-Marie repeated wondering. "Oh, yes, yes; he is going away to-night."

"He is taking back the day after to-morrow, isn't he?"

"I don't know," Anne-Marie replied with utter indifference.

"What, you don't know?" the Marquise exclaimed. "Well, I will tell you. Your husband will be back the day after to-morrow. I do hope, dear, that you will ever left you since your marriage, isn't that quite?"

Anne-Marie's mother had a remnant of a conscience and felt a little ashamed of it when she thought of the sale of her daughter to Brachard. She had been very friendly with her daughter she strove to awaken in her some affection for her husband, whose good points she extolled, although she carefully despised him, but she had never found it possible to penetrate the utter indifference of Anne-Marie.

"At the bottom of my heart I am glad of your journey, don't you feel, or, somewhat?" she accusingly.

"Do you mean that you wish to know whether I feel glad to be rid of Jacques?"

"Oh, no, no," the Marquise said hurriedly, frightened by her daughter's coldness. "Only I was afraid that—tonight—alone in your room—"

"I am much more lonely when he is there," Anne-Marie said bitterly.

"Annette, can't you think a little more kindly of him? Be thankful for his generosity. Make an effort. Jacques is so much in love with you. Your position touches my heart."

"Really," Anne-Marie said with cutting sarcasm, "you are my mother, you certainly don't expect me to love him?"

The Marquise d'Angeline watched impatiently the fluttering efforts of the Marquise to awaken, Anne-Marie to love her husband. Now, despairing of the interview coming to a natural end, boldly opened the drawing room from the card room and sauntered up to them.

The Marquise turned as he bowed and spoke to Anne-Marie.

"Hello, Jessie, have you stopped playing bridge?" she asked.

"Yes; I don't want to play all night. How are you, my dear Marie?"

"A very pretty woman was talking to me about you this afternoon, Jessie," the Marquise said gaily.

"Who was it?"

"Jeanne de Sivertelelle. Does that name recall anything?"

"She's from the country; a distant cousin of mine. She heard your name mentioned and exclaimed: 'Mr. Jerome Govain! Why, I know him. He's a dreadful man. One day at the races at Biddy, Govain, you eventually, he pulled my husband's nose.'"

"What tale is this?" Govain demanded, laughing.

"You got on a horse belonging to Henri-Isolle," the Marquise explained. "You didn't win and her entire set paid. They were disappointed and pulled the poor man's nose."

"Oh, yes, I remember," Govain said, laughing as if the recollection pleased him. "It was on the day when I rode race for fun. The fool cautioned me. I warned him that he be punished and he struck me. 'She said you nearly killed him.'"

"You a straight sword throat," Govain said indifferently.

"Really, I think you've fought with everyone."

"Oh, I've had a few duels," he replied modestly. "I'm always on hand, but I'm not an easy target after now."

"What a pity!" the Marquise said laughingly. "Are you going?"

"Yes, I must be off to the club, but I'll stay and chat with Anne-Marie for a few minutes."

"About your maid, your servants; what are you doing?"

"I haven't done anything," she said frankly.

"But listen, Annette," Govain protested. "You are going out with me. If you do not be not warn the servants, they will be furious."

"Is that possible?" she exclaimed with interest.

"And they will know you were not at home all night," Govain continued. "What an affair," she said laughing.

"Nothing risky," he assured her. "Just some your husband should find it out and question you?"

"Do you really expect such a demarche?" he said, with a contemptuous shrug of his slender shoulders.

"Be serious, Annette, for a moment. You could get out of it by pretending you were afraid to remain all alone and had stayed all night with Rosette, or—"

"Jessie, are you joking?" Anne-Marie asked, interested.

"But what would you say?"

"Not a word. I should simply shrug my shoulders. I do not give that gentleman any account of my actions."

Filled with admiration at her courage, Govain forgot his own timidness.

"You are amazing," he cried. "And you are brave, Annette. Do you love me?"

She could have loved you dearly, fearfully, Jessie," she answered, looking at him half doubtfully.

"I think you do; you love me terribly, my dear, confidently.

"I don't know; I don't think so," she said, objectively.

"Do I displease you, Annette?"

"Yes, you please me, you're always pleased me, Jessie; but you please me less than formerly. I can't explain it. I used to enjoy so much that you are elected—"

"Well, have I changed?" Govain demanded, his vanity wounded.

"Yes; you're not destiny-aware any longer. And you're not very kind to me."

"Thank you, Annette; go on; you entertain me. And I, you [illegible] Tell me what you did not laughing, you are. But nothing how far you can go with me."

"Perhaps—"

"Perhaps is essential.

"If you didn't care for me more than ever, sweetheart, you'd get rid of me. Our affair would grow tiresome to you. But you seek me; you wish me to be near you."

"I want to keep you, Jessie, and I want to keep Anne-Marie. Anne-Marie admitted frankly. I'm passionately to you. I have been beating my head against [illegible] when I am in your arms, I think it does me good, Jessie."

READ THESCHEDULE; VOTE ACCORDINGLY

THE easiest way for candidates and their friends to vote—by SPECIAL BALLOT.

DO YOU understand the method?

For every subscription to the Sunday American for thirty weeks, payable in advance through the European Tour Department, ONE SPECIAL BALLOT IS GIVEN.

This SPECIAL BALLOT represents 3,000 votes. It can be cast for any teacher the subscriber desires, whether the teacher is already in the contest or not.

It takes a long time for a candidate to collect 3,000 votes. A SPECIAL BALLOT WILL ACCOMPLISH THE SAME PURPOSE IN A MOMENT. Here is the revised SPECIAL BALLOT schedule:

VOTE NOW TO SEND YOUR FAVORITE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER TO EUROPE FREE

Voting Resumes To-morrow in Boston American's Great European Tour Contest—Cast Your Ballots Now!

THE battle of ballots goes merrily on in the Boston American's great European Tour contest for Sunday School Teachers of Boston and suburbs. The rivalry between the leaders is becoming more intense every day. The pace is growing faster—the "warming-up" stage has at last been reached.

Have you voted yet? One bears the question asked a hundred times a day—on the streets, in the trolleys, on the elevateds, in the hotels; in fact, nearly everywhere one may happen to go. The great European Tour contest is the all-important topic of conversation, not only in Boston, but in all the suburbs.

The time is ripe to watch out for now is new leaders and a remarkable change in the voting in every district. New candidates are springing up every week. Additional readers of both the Daily and Sunday American are becoming interested in voting in getting home for every week. The Special Ballot method of voting is gradually coming more and more into favor.

Every candidate, and the friends of candidates as well, should bear in mind that one Special Ballot cast in the contest accomplishes the same result as 3,000 coupons clipped from the Daily American, or 300 coupons clipped from the Sunday American. One Special Ballot is allowed with every subscription of thirty weeks to the Sunday American. And every time a Special Ballot is cast, some candidate goes ahead by 3,000 votes. This is important to every one.

Hard work is the keynote to success in this contest. Inactivity will surely kill you when it comes to getting votes. Candidates should begin to-day and strive to do a little better every week. Toward the end new candidates will appear, who may wrestle title and honors away from those who lead to-day or to-morrow.

That's why HUSTLE should be the watchword of all.

'HUSTLE' SHOULD BE WATCHWORD OF ALL

Coupons are printed daily in the DAILY and in the SUNDAY AMERICAN.

The Special Ballot, as printed on this page, is worth as much in addition to coupons, but it can be used ONLY by persons who subscribe for the SUNDAY AMERICAN.

Every Special Ballot cast counts THREE THOUSAND votes.

The regular advance order for the delivery of a copy of the SUNDAY AMERICAN for thirty consecutive Sundays, sent to the European Tour Editor, accompanied by a Ballot in the letter, or brought to him personally, credits 3000 votes to any candidate the subscriber may name.

Extra ballots will be issued to candidates according to the following schedule:

CONCERNING CHRISTMAS TICKETS

In doing away as impossible to prevent speculators securing tickets to the performances on Christmas Day. Therefore, by buying tickets at the box office and not ordering them by mail, patrons will secure better places, as we have decided to do away with all the poor seats in the Gallery, and will reserve all seats in the Balcony and Orchestra. Prices will be 25c, 50c and 75c. Matinee prices will be 25c. Orchestra and Balcony, First Balcony, 50 cents. Fifth Second Balcony, 25c. Tickets will only be sold at the box office and will be on sale at the door when Performance is Started. As Usual, Stalls at the Afternoon Performance on Christmas Day. Reserved Seat Tickets for the special performance to be given Christmas morning, from 10 to 1, are now on sale.

HOWARD

YE CITIZENS OF BOSTON

One hundred and thirty-two years ago the drums and fifes of your forefathers sounded the stirring melodies of "Chester," "Independence," "Columbia" and "Yankee Doodle," and the success of the American Revolution was piped to the tunes of Bill Billings, the great Boston composer. The presentment of another great Revolution is on hand. Tomorrow night the intrepid Jeanne d'Arc of the American Stage,

JULIA MARLOWE

Will present for the first time on any stage

The Goddess of Reason

A poetical drama of the French Revolution by Mary Johnston, the author of "To Have and to Hold." In this play you will hear the martial strains of "La Marseillaise" and the swinging and stirring rhythms of "Ca-Ira" and "Andre Chenier," the three melodies to which the French people marched to Liberty and to Death. The first performance will be given at eight o'clock promptly at the

MAJESTIC THEATRE

The play is the first drama from the pen of the distinguished American author and is written in five acts. William Archer, England's great literary critic and the British representative of the New Theatre now building in New York, wrote as follows in reviewing the play in printed form:

"The Goddess of Reason is the greatest poetical drama of today in English literature"

Matinees will be given during the first week on Christmas Day and Saturday, and during the final week on Wednesday and Saturday. Tour under the direction of the Messrs. Shubert. Play staged by J. C. Huffmann.

THE GODDESS OF REASON

Theatregoers will want the souvenir edition of this great drama, just issued, with an attractive portrait of Miss Marlowe as Yvette. A limited number of copies of the book for sale at $1.00.

That this feeling of nervous doubt is rapidly passing from the British mind may be illustrated by the following incident related last evening by a prominent citizen of Dublin, just back from a week's business trip to London. He said:

"At luncheon the other evening at the Cecil there was seated opposite me an affable and recently retired high officer of the navy, in fact, his rank in the service brought him close in seniority to Lord Charles Beresford. We chatted on various topics of the hour, finally coming around to the question of home rule for Ireland.

The Silence That Is NOT Golden

By Tom Carlton

For ages it has been a proverb among English-speaking people that "Speech is silver but silence is golden." Now nothing ever passes into a popular proverb which has not some truth in it. This saying is no exception. In the ordinary social intercourse of members of a conventional and artificial society there is always so much "cheap talk" that silence offers a contrast so agreeably restful that it is well called "golden."

But there is another proverb which says "No generalization is ever wholly true—not even this one." Silence may be "golden" in social relations, but not in business life; and more and more I am impressed by the number of otherwise intelligent, alert persons who seem never to have found it out.

There are men here in Boston, and in all the surrounding towns, who have worked for years to build up a business founded on the principles of honest worth and good service; men whose sole aim has been to produce goods better than their competitors or to offer them at a lower price, but are then content to sit down and let the people find it out.

Here is a case in point. A few weeks ago I happened to pass a small restaurant which had an unusually attractive display of food in the window. Everything looked clean, well cooked and wholesome, and there was a show-card which stated that "all our food is home-cooked."

Being tired of pies made by the thousand in a pie-foundry, I went in and had a most appetizing meal for a very modest price. Since then I have taken my luncheon there every day, and I have introduced several of my friends to the place. But I cannot help thinking how short-sighted the proprietor is not to let the public know the claims of his establishment upon his patronage. The only way he has broken his silence is by the display in the window and the show-card. That is all right so far as it goes. The trouble is it does not go far enough. It meets the eye of the casual passer-by, and that is all. A small amount of space in a daily paper of good circulation would tell the same thing to thousands of persons, while his card and window display now make it known to only a few scattered individuals. His kind of silence is anything but golden.

What is true of this man is true of thousands of others. On every side there are businesses which, though they continue to exist, are stagnant just for the want of a little judicious publicity.

There isn't one of them which has not some peculiar claim on public attention and patronage—a claim well known to proprietor and salesmen. Not one that cannot offer a customer some advantage above its rivals. If you wander into the store, the proprietor has no difficulty in telling you what these advantages are; and in a great many cases he convinces you of the truth of his statements, and so you buy. But he neglects the opportunity to lay his case before that vast audience which the daily paper places at his disposal. If he convinces you, could he not convince them?

Show windows and show cards and the personal talk of the skilful salesman are all good, but they go only a small part of the way. The window displays and the show cards can influence only those who see them, and how many of the possible purchasers of any article pass a given window even once a month? Moreover, of those who do pass, the majority are intent on their own business and thinking of little else as they pass along the street. As for the salesman, no matter how skilful he may be, or how good the bargains he has to offer, he can do nothing until he gets a customer to talk to.

The newspaper talks to thousands where any other form of publicity appeals to one. It comes before them at the very times when they are most at leisure—on the trains coming in to business in the morning, and going home at night, and in the comfortable hour after dinner. It does what nothing else can do so well: it gets the customer into the store, where every resource of good salesmanship and fine goods and low prices and late styles can be brought to bear to the best advantage.

When it is a question of selling goods, silence, instead of being golden, is a gold brick.

RED SOX PLANS FOR SPRING TRAINING TRIP.

NEW MEN IN THE LIST

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

Secretary McHeron made things seem like spring when he announced yesterday afternoon the plans for the training trip of the Red Sox. He is first in the field with his schedule of exhibition games, which will be in very much awake as many of the other big league clubs have not yet booked half their Spring practice games.

In brief, the club will train at Hot Springs from Feb. 27 until March 20 when it will begin its string of two game, return to Hot Springs for a week, go to Little Rock and then make a return again to Hot Springs for three days and then start North, playing in Nashville, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Dayton, Columbus, Wheeling and Baltimore.

The rendezvous for the Eastern Division of players will be at New York on Feb. 24 on that day the start will be made for Hot Springs, where now it is said quite a few have decided to train for two weeks. The party will leave New York will be President Taylor, Manager Duke, Trainer Green, and Players Lord, McConnel, Carrigan, Wagner, Stahl, Young, Criger, Dougherty, Winter, Hemphill, Hall, Powell, Dinneen, Dolan, Scheibeck, Glenn, Grant and Ferris. Hess, Cuppy and Fly Cobb will go direct to Hot Springs from California, while Tannehill will leave his home in time to join the others when they arrive at training quarters.

Some Grumbling Expected.

The itinerary of the Spring trip will please all hands until they strike Cincinnati on April 7. From April 3 until the 12th when the club plays in Baltimore there promises to be a lot of grumbling because of the cold weather likely to be encountered north of the Ohio river.

According to the list furnished to Secretary McHeron, 27 players will train at Hot Springs. In the number is Bill Young, which effectively disposes of the foolish report that he would be sold to St. Louis. There will be four catchers, including "Heavy" Spencer, the new man who is to replace Criger; ten slab artists, headed by Uncle Cy, eight infielders and five outfielders.

The club training at Hot Springs will obviate the necessity of sending the catchers and pitchers to that place for a belling out process in advance of the other players. The roster of the Hub of the Baseball Universe numbers twenty-one and as far as is to be at the present for twenty-two full days all hands will have a chance to take the baths if they need 'em.

In the list of players there are two or three men who have not been seen by Boston baseball fans and some of these may never be seen. Among them are Pitcher Pitman, drafted from Evansville; Outfielder French, drafted from Evansville, and said to be a find of Manager Selbach's size and speed and Outfielder Hooper, the "phenom" of Lynn.

Twenty-seven Players Going.

Outfielders are Gessler, Thomey, Speaker, Hooper and Hemphill.

Secretary McHeron will leave for Hot Springs a few days after the signs in order that superintendent Kelley may get ball field. In case he cannot secure a local man to lay out the grounds he will write for Jerome Kelly, groundskeeper of the Detroit park, to come on and look after such things. The schedule of exhibition games follows:

Saturday, March 20, Memphis; Sunday, March 21, Memphis; Monday, March 22, Little Rock; Tuesday, March 23, Little Rock; Wednesday, March 24, Little Rock; Thursday, March 25, Little Rock; Friday, March 26, Little Rock; Saturday, March 27, Memphis; Sunday, March 28, Memphis; Monday, March 29, Memphis; Tuesday, March 30, Memphis; Wednesday, March 31, Memphis; Thursday, April 1, Memphis; Friday, April 2, Columbus, Ky.; Saturday, April 3, Wheeling, W. Va.; Sunday, April 4, Wheeling, W. Va.; Monday, April 5, Wheeling, W. Va.; April 12, Baltimore, Md., Tuesday, April 14, Baltimore, Md.

BROOKLINE BOYS RUN CROSS COUNTRY

The cross-mile cross country run for Brookline schoolboys, which was held under the auspices of the Gymnasium Athletic Association yesterday afternoon, was won by Captain Lincoln of the Lincoln School in the fast time of 13 minutes 10 2-5 seconds. Duffy, also of the same school second, two minutes slower than the winning time.

Twenty-five boys were at the tape when the starter gave them the word, and all the twenty-five finished in good order, feeling none the worse for the run. Each contestant was examined before the race and after, and all the boys came out of the race in good condition.

The Lincoln and the Ruskin schools took all the honors, their boys taking the first five places. The boys finished in the following order: Captain Lincoln, Lincoln, first; John Hurt, Lincoln, second; Harold Harvey, Ruskin, third; Arthur Phillips, Lincoln, fourth, and J. Hicks, Ruskin, fifth.

CLARK IS FIRST IN THE ROLL-OFF

Clark was top man in the weekly roll-off on the Old Colony alleys with 297. Other large scores were: Dayton, 292; Ross, 292; Clark, 290; Holt, 270; Gifford, 268; Stone, 264.

JOHN L. TAKES COMMAND OF SPORTING PAGES.

WILL ANSWER QUESTIONS

John L. Sullivan, editor. The sturdy old "Champion of Champions" today takes on a new title.

He has signed a contract by the terms of which he becomes a sporting editor of the Boston American.

Although the big fellow is at present touring the Middle Western States on a theatrical engagement, arrangements have been made by which he will take up the work of his new position at once.

When the proposition to assume editorial connection with the sporting pages of the Boston American was made to Mr Sullivan for once in his life he hesitated. He has a few weeks more of his theatrical tour ahead, and he expressed himself as afraid that his necessary absence from the city would handicap him in the work.

This objection was promptly overruled when it was demonstrated that the Boston Boy" even tribe appeals and unrivall of service of the Boston American's leased wire system will, right from the start, give him a record of all sporting happenings of importance throughout the country, and with the Summer street editorial rooms, no matter where he might be it was shown that at all times by means of the leased wire he would be in close touch with the office and on intimate terms with every current sporting event.

HANDY WITH HIS PEN.

The ugliest old gladiator is no stranger to more adventurous into the boundaries of journalism. He is handy with his pen just as he is with both his hard and nimble fists. At the close of his exhibition tour he will return to Boston, here to give renewed force to his efforts in the newspaper field.

In the meantime he will direct by wire the news and comments appearing on the sporting pages of the Boston American. He will be the expert to pass on that topic on the merits and shortcomings of the stars of the pastoral mitt, on the schedule of fight promoters. John L. will be the forecast of coming sporting events of every nature. He will know by sporting game from end to end, does this popular ring verdict. His strong hold, of course, is the squared circle but what he doesn't know of wrestling, of baseball, the ice hockey game, golf and an umpire), of the turf and of all other branches of pastimes, isn't worth knowing.

Since retiring from the activities of the ring-side John has always "the squarest sport of all," has given much time to the study of these indred channels of the above-mentioned sports, including, rowing, billiards. He has even taken a whack at the elusive gutta percha golf ball, and says would-be to relate he has looked with a student's eye upon the British game of cricket.

"SQUAREST SPORT OF ALL."

So he's not only "the squarest sport of all," the fellow who has always been on the level," but he's the best all-round sport of all.

In addition to his editorial functions on the Boston American, Mr. Sullivan will be a daily contributor of sporting notes and comment on all subjects. He will make a feature of a prominent's column of sports, answering in person every query from any reader who may be in doubt as to some material or ethical point of the game.

Mr. Sullivan's accession to the staff of the Boston American will affect, in no way, the high standard of which the paper's present efficient corps of experts and special writers. These writers will continue at their respective desks, giving to the sport-loving people of Boston as they have done in the past, the newsiest and most readable articles on sports of any other paper in the city.

The acquisition of John L. Sullivan as sporting editor will be only to give additional strength to the existing sporting force.

SO. BOSTON Y. C. TO HOLD MEETING

The annual election of officers of the South Boston Yacht Club will be held at the clubhouse at City Point on Wednesday evening, Jan. 6.

Club members are unanimously in favor of Wilbur Soule for commodore, Arthur Leary for vice-commodore and Peter Cunningham for rear commodore, but a lively interest will be taken in the election of the following names of members to the house and regatta committees: Charles Bolleman, James P. Holland, Chubrie Bolleman, James B. Sullivan, A. Shaver and Arthur McKee; regatta committee, John J. Harland, Thomas F. Bruen, John F. Burke, Edward T. Roche and Harvey Shadt.

MORAN AT OLD HOWARD.

Owen Moran the English featherweight boxer, will appear at the old Howard this week in an athletic sketch entitled "Who's the Winner?" He will be assisted by his training partner, Sam Bolan.

FAC-SIMILE LETTER FROM JOHN L. SULLIVAN ACCEPTING POST OF SPORTING EDITOR OF THE BOSTON AMERICAN

Dec. 17, 1903.

Boston, Mass.

My dear Sir:

It is with much pleasure that I enclose the signed contract under which I am to assume the Sporting Editorship of the BOSTON AMERICAN (Daily and Sunday). I know of no newspaper in New England through which I can reach so many friends and through which I can talk with such frankness on so many subjects as are dear to me as the BOSTON AMERICAN. I think it is a great tribute to the enterprise of your paper that you are willing to pay the great cost that is involved in permitting me to do my editorial work by telegraph whenever I am absent from Boston. I know it is a big job but I know we can swing it. Of course, until I learned how all the sporting news of the world can be put before me over your leased wires, I did not see how I could do the work while I was away from Boston, but now I see that no matter where I may be in America your great system of leased wires covering the entire country makes it possible for me to do the work as well as if I were at my desk in Summer street.

With best wishes and the confidence that our new relations will prove mutually satisfactory, I am

Yours very truly,

John L. Sullivan

JOHNSON FEARS PLOT IN FIGHT

Says He Will Be on Square and Advises Friends to Bet on Him.

Chicago, Dec. 19.—"Just remember this. They are fixing it up to hand me a lemon, but they've come where I won't fall for the game. I'm going to double cross all the schemers in the world and get the title."

This is the way Jack Johnson, who is to fight Tommy Burns, in Australia, expresses his determination not to be a party to any "gentleman's agreement" that may or may not have been made in that event.

The determination is expressed in a letter to a relative of Johnson's wife in Chicago, urging his friends to put their money on him. The tone of the letter indicates that Johnson suspects that an attempt has been made to arrange a "no decision" whereby he is to "lay down."

Johnson also states that Sam Fitzpatrick, his manager, and Tommy Burns are "playing hog" with him, adding that the most money he can get out of the fight is almost nothing.

Fitzpatrick has stated repeatedly that the purse would be divided 60 and 40 per cent.

DONAHUE-DESHLER BOUT ENDS IN DRAW

New Orleans, La., Dec. 19.—Young Donahue and Dave Deshler fought ten fierce rounds to a draw here to-night. Deshler was the aggressor from the start, but Donahue was cool and calculating and kept out of harm's way. Deshler rushed his foe to the ropes repeatedly and jabbed his left to the Boston boy's face and head, causing the eye to close severely. The first half of the fight seemed to be Deshler's, as he landed oftener.

They fought straight rules, break at command of referee. Donahue repeatedly used a spurring in the first part of the fight, but Deshler could not get away until that tactic relied on jabs and tried for body blows but Donahue was too clever and covered. Donahue took his time and was by far the cleverest. He allowed Deshler to lead and saved himself in the clinches.

MIDDIES BEAT GEORGETOWN

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 19.—In a fast basketball game the Naval Academy team won from Georgetown by the score of 33 to 13 to-day.

BURNS-JOHNSON FIGHT COSTS FORTUNE--$62,500

Sydney Sports Promoting the Most Expensive Glove Contest in the History of the Prize Ring.

The Johnson-Burns fight, which is scheduled to take place on the 26th of this month at Rushcutter's Bay, near Sidney, Australia, will be the most expensive glove contest that ever took place in the history of the game—according to Australian papers just received.

If the figures the Australians give out are true, Australia is surely the richest sporting place in the world. They tell us that the receipts of the recent Burns-Squires fight were $68,000, not including the picture rights. Jim Coffroth will laugh himself to death if he ever hears of that. Jeffries people piling up almost $70,000 to see old Quince Squires box his sparring partner and life-long friend, Burns. Well, we will believe it just to get back to the rest of the story.

They say that Burns is to receive $30,000, win, lose or draw, a film of the fight worth $1,750, and two tickets to London worth $1,250. This runs his end up to $33,000, Johnson, according to the scribe, gets $5,000 for his end, three round trip tickets from London worth $2,000, and $500 for the picture privileges, making the negro's bit $7,500.

The land on which the arena is to be built cost $10,000, and the arena itself will cost $10,000. Then it will cost in advertising, etc., about $2,000. This brings the whole thing up to $62,500.

Imagine digging up that amount before you have ever sold a ticket!

The biggest house in New York was the McCoy-Corbett go, and that drew around $60,000, and they can pack some people in that Garden at a fight. The biggest house in France was the Corbett-Jeffries fight, which drew around $62,000. Tex Rickard claimed that Nelson and Gans drew $68,000 at Goldfield in that famous go, but wise ones winced and told me that $30,000 was nearer the truth.

"However, we drift," as Woodyard Kindling used to say.

Is it possible that there is so much money in Australia? If they are so crazy for fights it's a pipe that this country will be emptied within a few months. Sixty-two thousand five hundred blown in before the gates are opened!

It has been figured out that there is about fifteen hours difference in time between this city and Sydney, Australia, and that when Burns and Johnson enter the ring at Sydney at 11 o'clock in the morning of December 26 it will be about 8 o'clock in the evening of December 25 here. If this should be a postponement of the battle until 3 p. m., it would mean 10 o'clock Christmas night in this city.

Sam Fitzpatrick, Johnson's manager, cabled to a friend here the other day that the big negro, barring accidents, would win by a knockout inside of fifteen rounds.

QUINCY LOSES TO MALDEN

The Malden Y. M. C. A. defeated the Quincy Y. M. C. A. at the former's gymnasium yesterday afternoon 23 to 12. It was the first game of the Malden boys this season. The Y. M. C. A. juniors of each city played between the halves, the Malden juniors defeating their Quincy opponents 42 to 2.

The score:

MALDEN Y. M. C. A. QUINCY Y. M. C. A.

NELSON AN IDEAL CHAMPION SAYS JOHN L. SULLIVAN

BIG INTEREST IN BIG MEN

By John L. Sullivan.

Famous Old 'Champion of All Champions."

GETTING down to the lightweight division of boxers, we find one of the fastest and best classes that the country ever saw, a class that is brimming over with excellent young men, with the emphasis on the YOUNG.

That is the crying need of all class. Give us the young blood and there is no danger of dry rot or mold setting in.

The class that boasts of its young stars, with more peeping over the horizon, is the class that will last. It is the class in which the public will show interest the longest, always reserving the observation that in the heavyweights chief attention always centres.

While the lightweights will enjoy great vogue and prosper, the heavyweights, while scattering and of light calibre will continue to keep the centre of the stage on a par alone.

To my mind the present champion of the lightweight division, Battling Nelson of Illinois is about as ideal a young class leader as one could ask to find.

He reminds me more of the old-time gladiators of the bare-knuckle days than any of the others.

As a matter of fact, I think Nelson is a relic of some ancient fighting family, a family that remained dead for several decades only to spring up with this hard-headed young fellow as its best representative.

While I am a staunch admirer of the clever boxer and the clean-cut fighter, I am bound to sing praises of this Danish boy, who has proved such a whale among big fish. It does not seem to be that Nelson is a particularly clever man with his fists or possessed of an overpowering knowledge of the finer points of the game, but as a fighter pure and simple, a master of the old school, he is entitled to all the prizes in sight, straight, place and show.

NELSON WINS HIS BATTLES FAIRLY.

Nelson wins his battles. That is the main thing to commend in him and he wins them fairly, that is another grand point in his favor.

Even if he does depend upon native toughness and general bull-headed unconcern of punishment, he wins. When the end comes he is the one that is left with the strength to stand up. The other fellow usually is trying to find a soft spot in which to lie down and go to sleep, if he is not already in the Land of Nod.

Nelson would have been a wonder in any age of fighting. Before the present demitated game of boxing was brought to its present pitch of refinement, if such an expression is permissible, Nelson would have been the champion, and even before then, at any style of taking up arms or of throwing defensive guards of any sort, he would have been the baby boy of the age.

That's why I like him. He is more like the old-time pugilist than any man I know at the present time. You can find little in his style to admire but the fact remains that he is a fighter from tip to tip, every inch of him.

There are many admirable qualities in Nelson's composition of the lightweight division. Take that sterling young Irishman, Packy McFarland of Chicago. He is a most likable young man, and they tell me he is a wonderfully strong fighter, too. Well, he is bred to go the route and go it at a fast pace, for despite the fact that the Irish have no champions at the present time, it does not mean that Ireland and her festive sons are not going to be heard from in the near future.

And in the fighting game it is as hard to keep the Irish down as it is to expect the squirrel to "settle" when it hits the ground.

HARD TO FIGURE OUT A CHAMPION.

No, I am not predicting that McFarland will be the one to be a champion, although I will encourage him to keep on trying. There are so many, many slips to the uncertain game of boxing that I have long since put the lid on myself when it comes to figuring out the future. As a prognosticator I am not a howling success. I have never found a man in pugilism who was. But I have good, sober judgment and can form opinions that are good as anybody's.

That's why I am safe in saying that McFarland will be a hard man to keep out of the title if he keeps himself going along in his present clean style.

But the boy's path is to be a thorny one. England has sent over a hard man in Fred Welsh. He is, it seems, a promising candidate for the title.

It just goes to show what Americanising will do for the foreign brand of fighter. Here is a young man who possessed merely a good, rugged constitution and some ambition when he landed here. He has picked up all the best points of American fighters, and combining them with what he had originally stands out as one of the best men of his class.

Lack of hitting will handicap him, they tell me.

Wait a while. That may come to him. It sometimes does come to fighters who have been regarded as light hitters. The trouble is, most clever men sacrifice force to speed. They want to land too quickly and too often, and many times try to hit while getting their heads and bodies out of danger.

I have been told that Johnny Thompson, another Illinois fighter, is built on the Nelson lines, and being about the same article of toughness, has a good chance with Nelson. If he is anything like the Dane he must indeed be a wonder. That being the case, what a marvelous battle they would put up in a long struggle!

GOOD MEN IN LIGHTWEIGHT CLASS.

There are other good men in the lightweight division. Dick Hyland is a tough one. So is Tommy Murphy, the Eastern man, and the Atlantic cities have others that commend themselves to the critic.

Going into the lower classes, we find the English scrappers are beginning to share the honors with Attell, the best man we have here. This is not surprising, in England, as in all other countries, good big men are hardest of all to find. Any time from 115 pounds up to 140 you will find plenty of good men and to spare. Getting up over 140 pounds, they taper away to almost none at all.

Look at the heavyweight division to-day and then take a glance at the number of great light and feather weights. It is truly amazing.

Attell seems to be holding his own nicely, but one [illegible] to meet Jem Driscoll, the latest English wonder. Driscoll has a strain of the old sod in his composition, and may be the boy for Abe to watch most carefully. But, all in all, it looks to me as if the Hebrew knew more than enough to care for himself well against any of the invaders.

JOHN L. SAYS NELSON IS LIKE OLD-TIME FIGHTER

KELLEY BLAMES JOHN DOVEY FOR THE MIXUP.

His Lawyer Takes Off His Coat To Press the Ball Player's Case.

PROMISES WARM TIMES

Baltimore, Dec. 19.—Attorney Benjamin R. Shreeves, to whom Joe Kelley has entrusted the Baltimore end of his legal controversy with George H. Dovey and the Boston National League Baseball Company, has dictated a letter to a prominent Boston lawyer requesting him to take the "firing line" end of the case. Mr. Shreeves declined to state who the Boston attorney is on the ground he prefers personal contact, as the gentleman has manifestly not had time to accept the case though the letter should have reached him this morning. Mr. Shreeves said to night:

"The case is in an enlargeable state as it is now, but we are going into it with our coordinate to the idea of putting Kelley straight before the Boston public. If President Dovey had said to Kelley, 'While your work has been good, we believe that we could do better, and as you have the opportunity of returning to a field that will possibly be more to your liking, suppose we call off the remaining part of the contract with good feeling all around,' Kelley would probably have agreed.

Action Will Not Be Tolerated.

But this scrap business, this peremptory termination of a contract that seems as strong as could be worded, all without the shadow of explanation, will not be tolerated. Such an action must be considered by the casual observer a reflection upon Kelley in some way, and, we are convinced, an undeserved reflection.

"The attorney whom I have invited to become associated with me in this case is one whom I am assured will take great pleasure in bringing out all of the facts in the relationship of Dovey to Kelley, and I can almost promise now that they will be made unconfortably hot for the Boston magnate."

Kelley in the Dark.

As intimated in Attorney Shreeves's statement, Joe Kelley is absolutely in the dark as to why he should have been practically thrown out by the Boston club.

"My relations with President Dovey were always pleasant," he said to-day, "even at the recent meeting in New York he was extremely cordial to me, and for a moment I thought that he had actually called me over to ask me to withdraw my resignation, but when I was asked to do so I refused. Then I was asked to withdraw my resignation, but I said I would not do so until I knew what the trouble was. I was told that there was no trouble, but that Mr. Dovey thought it would be better for me to withdraw my resignation. I refused to do so, and then I was told that Mr. Dovey would like to see me in his office. I went there and he told me that he

RETAIL STORES CROWDED

"Improvement in Boston Is Heard on All Sides," Says John Shepard.

With the w[illegible] their highest speed under the influence of restored confidence, among [illegible] all over the country since the National election, Boston merchants report a holiday business of record proportions.

Prosperity is indeed supreme in New England and throughout all America.

The mails are clogged not only with Christmas presents, but with increased orders for all kinds of merchandise and factory supplies. The mills are unable to cope with the vast volume of new business, and additional armies of workers are being employed and new plants are being constructed.

"Our Christmas trade is already over $17,000 ahead of last year's record," said the same period, says John Shepard, of the Shepard Norwell Company. "We [illegible] not what it will be, yet the business has [illegible] I hear it on [illegible] We are in the midst of a [illegible] Boston is in Boston. Twelve Years—Miss Josephine [illegible], No. 20 Green street, Cambridge; pupil in Webster School.

Twelve to Fourteen Years—Mary B. Kaiker, No. [illegible] Bowdoin avenue, Malden; Malden High School.

Fourteen to Sixteen Years—Miss Teresa Finneran, No. 18 Eustis street, Roxbury; pupil in St. Patrick's School, Roxbury.

The handwriting of these five was selected yesterday by the judges as the best among fully 50,000 specimens submitted by the children of both public, parochial and private schools from all parts of Boston and suburbs. There are 245 other prize-winners whose names are given herewith.

Judges in Contest.

The judges in the contest, chosen from a great number of Boston experts in handwriting were:

William E. Hingston, handwriting expert, remembered because of his prominence in the famous Rice will case and the Tucker murder trial, and frequently employed by the government in big murder cases.

Thomas A. Mullen, former School-house Commissioner and Harvard graduate.

J. H. Libby, instructor in Penmanship in Somer's Commercial School and well known business man.

The judging in the contest was [illegible] last night at 10 p m. The committee labored since 2 o'clock this afternoon in the room of the [illegible] Boston, [illegible] many thousands of specimens [illegible] that have been received in the [illegible] days of the contest.

Plowing the Sea—Wasted Force

Many a Man of Power and Thought Is Plowing the Sea To-day. But Let Us Be Sure That We Criticise the Sea-Plowers Justly.

MR. CARTER has made this striking cartoon to illustrate wasted effort.

It shows a sharp, capable plow of iron, powerful horses, determined, directing man, all thrown away—THE PLOW CAN LEAVE NO FURROW, except for a second, on the surface of the sea.

It is a striking picture, and a beautiful one. It appeals strongly to many a man, strongly and bitterly, unfortunately, to many a man whose life draws toward the end.

How many of us are plowing the sea, struggling, striving, wasting force, never able, apparently, to get upon the solid land, WHERE PLOWING COUNTS!

You know the sea-plowers; you could name a dozen kinds of them.

There's the man who dreams, whose thoughts, noble and good, are at sea; far from reality, planning, scheming, seeing visions—PLOWING THE SEA. A fraction of the energy that he puts into his dreams and schemes and imaginations, applied to real work, to solid ground, would give deep furrows and rich harvests.

There's the woman visionary—seeing, longing for, demanding the difficult or the impossible. Something that nobody else has done she would like to do—wonderful things that the world would talk of.

She plows the sea, and the solid ground of home and happiness, maternity and real usefulness are put behind her.

And there's the man, numerous everywhere, whose work is always to-morrow, whose great deed is to be done the next day or the next year. He is thinking to-day, he will act later. To-morrow he will still be thinking, and still action will be postponed. He plows the sea, THE THIN AIR.

It is a good thing to print this picture of Carter's, for it will make a good many men and women ask themselves whether their plowing is on the solid ground or whether they are at sea, wasting upon non-resisting water, upon the stuff of dreams and fancies, the force that should be fastened to the rugged earth and made to work and to rip stubborn soil into fertility.

The man who isn't doing his best may not be plowing the sea, but he is a poor plowman, and the soil is badly selected. This picture is for such a man as that, as well as for the dreamer, the utter waster of time.

If you are doing only a tenth of what you might do, or if you are doing the same thing over and over, always postponing the new effort that shall push you forward, YOU, TOO, ARE PLOWING THE SEA.

In all criticism, however, in all generalizing, the exception must be remembered. There are those that have been called plowers of the sea WHEN THEY ARE PLOWING THE SOLID GROUND, BUT TOO HIGH FOR OTHERS TO SEE OR TO REALIZE THEIR REAL WORK.

The man that worked patiently at the new invention, with only contemptuous laughter for a reward, through months and through years, seemed to be a plower of the sea. He was really the deep, subsoil plowman, the author of the greatest fertility.

The man that demands the better social state, who works for it and dies for it sometimes, has contempt and mockery for his pay. He better sees the crop that rewards his efforts—and ignorant people around him cannot see the solid earth of truth beneath his feet, the deep, eternal furrow that his plow is turning over. And they say that HE plows the sea.

How is a man in our day, at this hour, who has ambition, who is not satisfied in a rut, TO KNOW WHETHER HE IS DOING USEFUL WORK OR NOT? Isn't it the best and simplest plan to do two kinds of work? There are in every man two or three personalities, different—why not put two of them at work?

Each of us has in him something of the prosaic, some trace, at least, of good, plodding, hard-working ancestry, which makes up a tenth, or a half, or nine-tenths of us. Why not hitch up the hard-working plodder within us to some good, plain, hard work—honest, regular, productive, stony plowing if you like, but REAL PLOWING?

Then take one of the other beings more flighty within you—the self that stands for restlessness, aspiration, altruism, or any other name by which you choose to call "ambition"—put that higher, nervous self to work in another line, BEING CAREFUL NOT TO LET IT INTERFERE WITH THE PLODDING WORKER IN THE STONY SOIL.

The work that ambition inspires is difficult to judge. The greatest of men and the greatest of workers haven't known themselves what they were doing. The man that mistrusts himself most thoroughly is often the deepest and best of humanity's spiritual plowmen. The man best satisfied, most content with himself, is often foolishly plowing up the sea's waves.

One test you can apply to all effort and not go far astray. Let a man ask himself, "Am I really trying to do something that will be of use, if I succeed, to other men?"

That question is the touchstone of all effort in this world. It answers even the question of the plodder, the very humblest. For the day laborer, with his slow and stony plowing, is providing care for a family, comfort and protection for one other human being. He is working for all human beings.

The man of ambition should realize that all he has, all the possessions of all humanity, result from the strivings, the restless aspiring and the long procession of thousands of millions of human beings that have lived on this earth. We owe everything to them. The man who can feel that his work, if successful, will be of service to the future is plowing on the high, solid land.

In this material age it is well to remember that there is something worse than plowing the sea, AND THAT IS, PLOWING THE MUCKHEAP OF MERE MONEY.

Many of our moneymakers, of course, will be written down among the most useful men in all the world's history. They are essentially organizers, simplifiers, and money is only an incident. But in the muckheap of money there are the plowers of the muck, THOSE TO WHOM BUNYAN REALLY REFERRED IN THE MUCKRAKE PARAGRAPH WHICH PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT MISAPPLIED.

There are men of power, real intelligence, tremendous energy, SIMPLY MAKING MONEY GAMBLING IN STOCKS, GAMBLING IN THE NATURAL WEALTH. Those plowers of the money muckheap are the saddest of all samples of energy wasted.

For instance, it is better to undertake a great thing, work at it all your life, and die with nothing but the consciousness of honest effort to reward you, than to undertake some petty thing beneath your powers AND UNWORTHY OF THEM.

Epictetus says: "You can be invincible if you enter into no contest in which it is not in your power to conquer."

The prizefighter who confines himself to attacking babies will never be beaten. The man of real force who is content to vegetate in a village will always be a great man TO THE VILLAGE IDIOT. But it isn't victory, conquest or success that makes a man. The real proof of manhood is TRYING.

Christian Science and the Emmanuel Movement

Alfred Farlow Discusses the New System Established by the Boston Church.

The following article, published in the London Universal Leader of April 18, 1908, is the most scientific statement of the views of Christian Science in respect to the Emmanuel Movement that has appeared in this country.

"Human Will Is the Cause of All Trouble; Its Misconceptions Constitute the Basis of All Disease; the Divine Mind Is the Only Real Cure."

OH, WINNIE!

Verse by Carolyn Wells

"Dear Uncle Henry, you're a love," said winsome Winnie Wynne,
"To take me to the Fancy Ball." Her uncle gave a grin.
"Oh, well," he said, "this toggery will set me off a bit.
You'll be a ripping shepherdess! I think we'll make a hit.

Alas for Uncle Henry! When the great affair drew nigh
A bad attack of gout came on. He feared that he would die,
And then he feared he wouldn't! When Winnie came to call
He groaned with pain. 'Ow! ooh!" he said, 'I can't go to that ball!"

Now, Winnie couldn't go alone. When Doctor came next day
She said, "You must make Uncle well—you simply must, I say!"
"Hey day, Miss!" said the doctor, "you are asking quite a lot!
'Twill be a week or more before your uncle leaves this spot!"

"But, doctor—" winsome Winnie said "No arguments!" said he.
'But, doctor, dear—" "No, madam; no pleading will move me.
"But, dearest doctor—" "Stop, Miss Wynne. This is a serious case!"
Then—like a sunny angel—Winnie smiled straight in his face.

"H," said the grinning doctor—"if I could be of use—
If I could—if you'll let me—allow me—oh, the deuce!
I mean—may I go with you and wear your uncle's rig?

I'm a pretty slick companion for a smiling shepherdess!"

The ...egend beautiful works its annual miracle and hearts glow and blossom into love and thoughtfulness for other-Little lords and ladies bountiful of joy-ous missions bent are a pretty part of the great Christmas pageant. Boston far famed for its charity, has inculcated the virtue of virtues into its little children, and those rich in this world's goods find the greater part of their Christmas joy in just giving to the little children of the less fortunate. From their baby days they have been trained to share their joys at Christmas and already even the tiniest of them are busy with their Santa-baskets which are being rapidly filled and made ready for personal delivery on the "day of days."

Little Marie and Anna Agassiz daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Agassiz; Alice and Olivia Amy daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Amey, the daughters of Mrs. Beatrice Goodridge, the young son of the Rudolph Coolidges and any number of other children who have been trained since babyhood in the art of giving will this year as usual bring happiness to big hearts of the little ones in the Children's Hospital, the Home for Crippled and Deformed Children, as well as various private homes which are too often overlooked by the good St. Nick.

Sharing interest with the Yule-tide joys was the announcement on Tuesday of the engagement of Miss Nancy Filley, second daughter of the McKinley Filleys of Sherbourne and sister of Oliver Filley, captain of the famous Harvard crew that towered the colors of the Blue at New London in 1906, to John Ames, one of the wealthiest and most prominent young citizens in town. Miss Filley was one of the most dazzling successes of her debutante season two Winters ago and is the leading spirit in the unique and exclusive group of sunbeams known as the Endean Rengies, which has as other members Miss Katherine Roosevelt and Miss Ethel Fay, both of whom have become engaged within the past month. Miss Margaret Howard and the Misses Joan and Edith Bird, who have been having with their pack for a couple of years around and about the region of East Walpole.

Miss Filley, who went abroad with her parents in the early Spring to attend the wedding of her sister Mary and Ian Cecil FitzWilliam, the wealthy young Englishman whom she met in England where her brother captained the Harvard crew when it rowed against the Cambridge, England, crew, two years ago, has just returned from her Summer abroad, and is with her parents at their beautiful country estate in Sherborne.

Mr. Ames is the son of Mr and Mrs F. L. Ames of Commonwealth avenue and North Easton and graduated from Harvard in 1901. He is prominently identified with society every club in town, including the Somerset, Tennis and Racquet, Brookline Country, Norfolk Hunt, Automobile and Harvard Club of New York.

Of more than ordinary interest, coming with the announcement of the Ames-Filley engagement and the preparations for Christmas, was the wedding yesterday of Miss Elizabeth Cabot and Henry Lyman, Harvard '01, whose engagement was announced early in the Fall. Miss Cabot is the daughter of Mr. Samuel Cabot of Commonwealth avenue and is a favorite member of the Vincent Club. The ceremony took place at noon at the Cabot residence and was performed by the Rev. Reward W. Brown, pastor of King's Chapel. The bride, who wore a handsome gown of white satin, was unattended and was given in marriage by Dr Arthur Tracy Cabot, an uncle. Theodore Lyman was his brother's best man and the ushers were Charles P. Sargent, Jr., and C. H. Whitney of Milton.

A small reception for relatives and immediate friends followed the ceremony, which was as quiet as possible on account of the mourning in both families.

After a short honeymoon tour Mr. and Mrs. Cabot will reside at No. 190 Marlboro street.

Another notable bridal of the month will be that of Miss Katherine Page of Brookline and Dr. William S. Stone of New York. Like the Lyman-Cabot wedding, it will be exceedingly quiet.

At a tea given recently by Mrs. John Hogewell at her home on Waverly avenue in Newton, announcement was made of the engagement of Miss Nellie Hartley Hopewell to Clarence Conant Colby, Harvard '02 and Harvard Law School '05.

Assisting at the tea tables was a bevy of white frocked girls, all intimates of Miss Hopewell, and including the Misses Florence Colby, Grace Hopewell, Edith Chapin, Ruth Crosby, Marion Fenno, Anne Wellington, Ruth Marshall, Vera Stilwell, Ora West, Florence Jones, Mabel McClellan, Harriet Burleigh, Mabel Burleigh, Marion Johnson and Kate Hunt.

HEAR MERRY WIDOW SONGS

Miss Amy Lowell gave one of her most delightful entertainments Sunday evening at her palatial home, "Lernele," in Brookline, when Mandolin Club rendered "The Merry Widow" company gave a group of songs, including The Little Match Girl," "The Charitable Maid," "Handsome Isador," "Frau Josephine," "Alfred the Insane," and "The Greedy Rat."

Mrs. Frothingham presided at the piano, rendering a suite in three movements, the First Movement Sonata in B flat, Whiting's Prelude and Debussy's "Jardin sous la Pluie." Mme. Aberanetti and Mr Symons gave two duets, "The Hazel Nut" and "The Merry Husband." After the musical program, a playlet, entitled "The Leading Thing," by Alfred Sutro, was given with Miss Aberanetti as Kitty and Mr. Fiscus as D'Arcy Galbraith.

Miss Nora Thayer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Thayer of Commonwealth avenue, will spend the Christmas holidays in Washington as the guest of the Robert Bacons, and will be among Bostonians attending the coming out ball of Miss Ethel Roosevelt late in the month.

Mrs. Philip Dexter and Miss Helen Hooper are to spend the coming month in Bermuda. Miss Hooper's health has been in a precarious condition ever since the sudden death of her father, Robert Hooper, at their North Shore home last Summer.

Mr and Mrs. Arthur Perry, of Marlboro street, are recent additions to the Boston colony of fashionables at Virginia Hot Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Marlon Lane and their little daughter, Katherine, are leaving town early next week for Baltimore where they will be guests of Mrs. Lane's parents, Professor and Mrs. Basil Gilderslieve, over the holidays.

Quite the smartest debutante affair of the week was the large tea which Mrs. Franklin Augustus Snow gave at her home in Brookline yesterday from 4 until 7 o'clock to present her daughter, Miss Irene Snow. Several of Miss Snow's fellow buds assisted her mother in the attractive reception room, [illegible]

This Week in the Theatres of Boston—News of the Plays and Players

Julia Marlowe in "The Goddess of Reason" Premiere in Week's Drama

CHRISTMAS week on the Boston stage gives us old and new and much between.

For the very latest feature in dramatics there is the premiere of Miss Julia Marlowe in her new play, "The Goddess of Reason," at the Majestic. To-morrow night brings the first public performance on any stage of this play by the author of the French Revolution, written by Miss Mary Johnston.

In point of age the Bowdoin Square Theatre has too rail with its holiday offering of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," revived for a Christmas entertainment. It seems not unlikely that one hundred years from now, when present-to-day successes are forgotten and the great names and one exuberant chorus girl of to-day are but a memory, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" will still be a stock favorite, bloodhounds and all.

With sweet irony, "The Merry Widow" bears out the Christmas spirit of giving us good-by. This is her farewell week at the Tremont. But Boston cannot complain. She will have been here eight or nine weeks when the final curtain rings down next Saturday night.

"The Third Degree" at the Hollis enters on its fourth week. This Klein drama is still new enough to have the charm of novelty and it is a big addition to Christmas play bills.

Even more recently with us is "Paid in Full," which begins its second week at the Colonial. This mirror of the day human life, one of the strongest dramatic works that ever came to this city, is drawing heavy patronage.

Fleurette De Mar, in "Hook of Holland," at the Park.

The Boston has a decided change for this week. After the departure of the stock company last night this famous playhouse will be given over to continuous entertainment for the present, with special attractions for children during the holidays.

Vaudeville bookings are arranged with an eye to getting the stars of the vaudeville constellation. The initial bill with Nat M. Wills at the Orpheum Emma Carus heads a programme which includes many strong acts, including the debut of Willie Hoppe in a billiard exhibition.

The Castle Square divides the week between "The Devil" and "The Chimney Girl," the one bashing the first part of the week and the latter the last part.

"Graustark" holds over for the week at the Globe, the popularity of this dramatized version of George Barr McCutcheon's novel calling for more than one week's stay, booking which usually prevails at that house.

The Grand Opera House offers "Bunco in Arizona," a melodramatic affair, of a sort in the role and each. Well.

Also in a different vein is the stage show and circus riders of the two-bodied boy, being re-tried among the latter.

Burlesque is right on deck for the merry holiday time. The Howard can't miss its ethnic carnival and has a new Sam Scribner burlesque frame for the week "The Rollickers" come to the Columbia, which also has its three feature nights, dancing, wrestling and "book" night, all in one. The Gaiety stage is held by the Casino Girls and the Trocadero Burlesquers to see Tom Riley a Greater New York stars.

Miss Julia Marlowe Puts on New Play.

Another dramatic event for Boston.

Miss Julia Marlowe puts on at the Majestic Theatre to-morrow night, for the first public performance on any stage, her new play, "The Goddess of Reason," a tragedy of the French Revolution, written by Miss Mary Johnston.

Miss Marlowe needs no introduction. The fact that she has come to Boston for the premiere is of itself tribute.

Miss Marlowe says that she has delayed the opening of "The Goddess of Reason" for two months just because she wanted Boston to pass on it first.

"I have chosen Boston as the proper place to produce my new play," says the star, "not alone because it is first and foremost among the literary cities of this country, but also because the fact that history has made here during the United States Revolution, and this being a revolutionary play, albeit French Revolution, it is unusually fitting that it be given its premiere here."

Which is complimentary to Boston.

"The Goddess of Reason" is the work of Mary Johnston, the noted novelist, author of "To Have and to Hold," "Prisoners of Hope" and other literary best-sellers." Miss Johnston brought it out in book form in success. Now comes the dramatized version, arranged by the author herself.

In this connection there is a point or two added interest. In this production Miss Marlowe makes her debut as an actress-manager. Her position certainly becomes. Shrewd. They handle the booking and other business side of the enterprise. But Miss Marlowe needs no tuition in the matter of singing and other dramatic management.

As to the story of the play.

It opens during the early French Revolution. The spirit of Terror marks itself deep upon the history of the time and upon the characters of the play. The love interest runs through it all.

There are five acts, all scenes being laid in the city of Paris. The time is during the immediate years of 1793. It was there that the Reign of Terror began, when the streets of the metropolis were flowing in the blood, glutted by the horrors of the guillotine, they called it "Republican slaughter."

The play opened the fearful "Republican Marriage," so-called, in which man and woman, or youth and maid, were bound over to hear and link to limb and rust "part to part in miserable unity, into the Lethe to perish in miserable unity. Naturally any play in which flits is staged will not be lacking in dramatic features.

Miss Marlowe takes the role of Yvette, the shepherd girl, who is daughter of a fisherman's wife and the Duke of Mordaf.

Yvette's noble father dies. His success becoming, Mr. Frichou as the artist, Mr. Hassell as the father, Mr. Meek as the servant, and Miss Cleveland as the model.

On Thursday evening, which is Christmas Eve, comes Mr. Craig's grand holiday spectacular production of "The Circus Girl." This will be his most ambitious attempt of the season. The orchestra will be enlarged, there will be a chorus of twenty-four voices, and the production will be staged with all the splendor and elaborateness that has characterized Mr. Craig's previous efforts. The "Circus Girl" will be the sensation of the season, regardless of how some seasons ago, and it was played in New York for a year, and in other cities throughout the country for longer periods. Mr. Craig is preparing Musical Comedy Mr. Craig will be Mr. Craig's Musical Comedy Mr. Craig will be Mr. Craig's Musical Comedy Mr. Craig will be Mr. Craig's

THE NEW QUEEN OF THE "400"

EXTREMELY INTERESTING AND NEW PORTRAIT OF MRS. JOHN JACOB ASTOR IN FANCY DRESS COSTUME REPRESENTING ROMNEY'S PAINTING OF LADY HAMILTON AS "THAIS."

ALTHOUGH the question is still debated there is little doubt that Mrs. John Jacob Astor is to be the new Queen of New York's "400."

By beauty, wealth, birth and charm she is so well fitted to the position that no other woman, however ambitious, can hope to compete with her serenely.

This picture shows Mrs. Astor as she appeared in the tableaux vivants given some time ago by New York society women at the Plaza Hotel. Pictures of several of the other fair participants, as they, too, have already been published, but this, the most interesting of them all, is now seen for the first time.

Mrs. Astor's pose, with its background, is as close a reproduction as possible of Romney's celebrated picture of Lady Hamilton as Thais. Romney painted Lady Hamilton in several picturesque historical roles, and he not unreasonably concluded that Thais was a suitable one. At one time Americans would have condemned Thais as a person not to be mentioned in good society, but now, with broadening ideas and the help of Miss Mary Garden, she is regarded as an interesting historical figure.

Thais was a Greek beauty of the fourth century B. C. and she wrought havoc in ancient Egypt and the East generally. She was a great friend of Alexander the Great and, according to legend, induced him to burn the great Persian palace at Persepolis because the King who occupied it had

KNOWN a wave did we know it. "The Irresistible Girl," she has met The Man Who Could Resist and disappointment and defeat have been her portion.

The story has a play as the pivot. It has two heroes and two heroines. Two famous men, a great theatrical producer and stage director and a brilliant playwright, and two beautiful young women, noted actresses both, are chief figure s in the strange tale. There is a surprise, too, a surprise of love. And at the last there is the always piquant element of uncertainty. What will the Irresistible Girl do now? No one knows, and yet it is predicted that, whatever she does, will be interesting because she always does interesting things.

Enter Miss Charlotte Walker, the first heroine. From the time this winsome Southern girl toddled from her mother's to her father's knee and looked into his face with coquettish triumph at her feat, and her parent swung her high above his head, crying, "You are an Irresistible girl," the title has followed her. In Texas when she was the belle of Galveston, her entry into a ballroom was heralded

When the Galveston flood almost literally washed her upon the stage a critic wrote: "Of technique she knows nothing, but her personality is bewitching. Personally she is irresistible."

"Miss Walker makes me lose patience with one person with whom I am always. He had been a partner supporter of patient—myself. Per art—she has no art; she is utterly untaught—yet she is so lovable that I go again and again to the theatre where she is billed. "I find her irresistible," said another.

Even as the critics on one side, so the actors and managers on the other side of morning a new genius of the stage was introduced to the readers of the daily papers

"The author of 'Paid in Full' is a young newspaper man," was the answer to those who asked who wrote the play, which was a photograph of middle class flat dwellers' life in New York, that was brutal in its strength and gripping in its logic. "Before Charlotte Walker "Paid in Full" was followed by "The Jolmad the company we were happy, but she bewitched him." To which Miss Walker's friends have replied: "It was not plicate companies were sent on the road to Charlotte's fault. She is an unconscious win success and earn money simultaneously with the New York production. In the vivid land of The Rialto to write a play that runs for a continuous year is to be a king on Broadway.

Mr. Walter met Miss Walker. Dreamed an incorrigible bachelor, he went the way of other men. He, too, found Miss Walker "the irresistible girl." Immediately he joined her train.

He who has said, "I'm willing to marry if some girl would come along and face me, she needn't be pretty, just a good pal," informed Miss Walker that she "came up to the plans and specifications" and implored her to end his bachelorhood. Miss Walker, Belasco like, hesitated, meditated. As the result of these meditations she said with charming candor when she presented Mr Walter to her friends:

Tell me what you think of him, because some time I may make up my mind to marry him."

As the courtship progressed she said of her blunt ne Othello wooer: "Eugene is rather rough, but after you know him awhile if you look close you can see wings."

Plots of the surface of the wooing. In the depths of the courtship appeared the fact that Miss Walker beseeched her admirer to permit her to play the star part in his new play. With two successes for his laurel crowns, there had been much speculation about what Eugene Walter would do next. Frankly he announced "The play is called 'The Easiest Way.' It is the story of the so-called bad woman's progress in New York." The play, they who had read it said, was a tremendous opportunity for the actress who was selected to play it. Miss Walker rapped at the door of opportunity.

"Let me play it, Eugene," she begged, with her fascinating pout. "Yes, dear," responded the dazzled playwright. Miss Walker clapped her small, white hands in sheer joy. Visions of her name in splendor above the door of a Broadway theatre danced before her as in her childhood of not long ago had visions of fairies. "You dear! If you do, I will marry you." The author's face glowed.

"I will make Mr. Belasco put you out in it," he promised.

"What has Mr. Belasco to do with it?"

"Oh, nothing, except that he is to produce the play, and has a contract."

"Oh!"

"But I shall make him give it to you."

"If you do I will marry you, dear," said the Irresistible girl.

Enter Frances Starr. Three years ago Frances Starr was a name the Rialto had never heard. David Belasco, sitting back in the balcony, standing his eyes with his hands, watched a slender, brown-haired girl standing on the wheel of a stage tailpiece, in the position of theatrical pantomime of watching an imaginary race in the play "Gallops." The girl didn't do much, but she did it well. There was a delicate, pelucant quality in her acting that stirred the admiration of the master. He sent for the little unknown and made her leading woman for David Warfield in "The Music Master." The next season he presented her in the title role of "The Rose of the Rancho." Critics praised her without qualification. "The Rose of the Rancho" ran for two years. Mr. Belasco, casting about for a play for Miss Starr, began writing one for her. Then he tossed it aside, saying that he had found one that pleased him more.

What was the new play? The star did not know. David Belasco's staff did not know. He alone possessed the secret, and the Sphinx is not more silent.

One morning Eugene Walter sought Mr. Belasco in that secret studio, unknown to mere humans, where he works his magic. Mr. Walter, his delicious secret buzzing in his breast, came bluntly to the point. He is of the opinion that when a man wants anything he should say so in unmistakable English. "I want Charlotte Walker to play the star part in 'The Easiest Way.'" he said.

Mr. Belasco was silent.

"You know there is a clause in our contract saying that I may choose the person who is to play the part," he reminded the producer of plays.

Belasco listened

"Why don't you say something?" The question burst from the ardent suitor

"Why do you want Miss Walker to play it?"

"Because, because"—

"I see. But I have chosen Miss Starr for the part. Rehearsals begin next Wednesday."

Mr. Walter bounced to his feet, an angry red in his cheeks. "The clause about my choosing the star?" he muttered, choking.

"Was drawn out by mutual consent. You have forgotten," returned the playwright, imperturbably.

"I will get an injunction restraining you."

"It will be useless. Be calm; remember the contract."

But Mr. Walter remembered only Miss Walker. How should he face her? What should he say to her? And there was the promise, a conditional one, depending upon whether she got the part. He blazed at Mr. Belasco. He raged. He fumed. He almost wept. The manager was firm as a rock in an angry sea.

"Remember the contract" he repeated, and, pityingly, "Be calm, my boy."

But how could Mr. Walter be calm? There was his happiness at stake—happiness with "the irresistible girl." He rushed to the courts. There from a cold eyed judge he got no comfort, only advice. It was of the same nature as Mr. Belasco's "Be calm."

"She will not marry him," said the Rialto, with its ear to the ground, whispering.

Mr Walter heard its whispers, too, and he turned pale, for he believed them. Why should he not? The Rialto has a relentless logic of its own. He called on "the irresistible girl." He told her the story of the imperturbable manager, of the story-faced Judge. Ha, Forest Walker, swore, but he swore impotently. Miss Walker burst into tears.

"And I must go on the road, and go on playing 'The Warrens of Virginia' when I am tired of it," she mourned.

"I won't—I will sue Belasco"—

"What will be of no use. But I"—— she lifted her tear-stained face, "will send him a notice"

The next day Mr Belasco received a brief resignation from Miss Walker. Still he remained the rock in an angry sea. The rehearsals of "The Easiest Way" went forward with Miss Starr in the rehearsals. The play will be produced during the days

And "the irresistible girl"? Miss Walker wept until she was quite ill. Then every one in it Mr Walter has sputtered spiteful feminine things about her manager. Things always go by favoritism on the stage," she said it as if it were quite original with her; she vowed that she would leave it and never return to it.

"But what will you do then, Charlotte?" inquired the other miserably.

"Do? I don't know. I suppose I will get into an office and be a typewriter girl."

Why Honeymoon Trips Are Dangerous "Trial Trips."

THE honeymoon trip, said to be one of the oldest existing customs, is rapidly going out of fashion. This unexpected information comes from the class of people who, above all others, would be certain to know, namely, hotel managers. With deepest regret, the heads of the big hostelries say that more and more bridal couples are going straight home after the ceremony.

Those who did take the time-honored "honeymoon trip" made it another last year than ever before, and this year they are only taking a day or two. In a few years it seems probable that the custom will have become entirely obsolete.

The reason seems to be in the fact that the trip is no longer necessary, and that honeymoons are really critical times for the nerves, which are less likely to prove unhappy in the quiet of the home than in travel and hotels.

Those who pry into the prehistoric past of the human race say that the honeymoon journey came about, like most things, from necessity. When a young man wanted a wife in the wild, uncivilized days of the hunting and fishing stage he had to get her by force, unless by chance he happened to be wealthy in such worldly goods as there were in those days.

But few young men were wealthy enough then to buy their wives, as was la-ful and proper. There was another and more popular, though strenuous, method. It involved the aid of a man friend, who was the "best man." He was indeed the best man, for on his bravery and cunning depended the whole success of the undertaking.

If the would-be bridegroom owned or could borrow or steal a horse he would do so. Then he would smooth the knob off one side of his club. The smooth side would be to overcome the coy objections of the bride without permanently injuring her good looks. The knobby side of the club was for the benefit of the father and brothers or other men folks, who were certain to rise from their slumber and fight.

In the middle of the night the groom and his best man broke into the home of the bride-to-be, who, more than likely, had small suspicion of serious intentions. Then would follow blows, shrieks and confusion. If the goddess of love proved favorable, the groom would emerge bearing the insensible form of his beloved.

Under cover of the "best man's" valiant fighting, the groom must jump upon a horse with his precious burden and escape.

Thus the "honeymoon trip" began, and it lasted just as long as the angry father kept up the "pursuit." Now, that it is no longer good form to propose with the smooth side of a club and the only violence attending a wedding is the hurling of old shoes, the whole system has become unnecessary.

The first few weeks of married life decide whether the new career shall start right or wrong, and nothing unfavorable to success should enter into the environment. The manager of a famous New York hotel remarked as follows on his experience of honeymoons:

"Brides and bridegrooms are not always the ecstatically happy people they are supposed to be, and tears on a honeymoon are not by any means unknown," he said. "I used to manage a hotel in Boston, and any number of honeymooners came there. The wedding day is an awful strain, and often upset tempers for days. The young people would arrive at the hotel just in time for dinner after a journey of six hours, and often more. The bride would be looking pale and tired, be harassed and worried to see her so, and making a great fuss generally. Then would follow a hurried unpacking and frantic preparations for dinner. He would do her dress up all wrong, and while the chambermaid was rectifying matters would discover that his dinner coat had been left behind or that he had no dress shoes. Then the first meal together would be a dismal failure.

"Which are the dangerous rocks in the early days of marriage? I think that keeping her husband waiting is the first crime every young wife commits. I see from real life how long it takes a woman to dress. You can instantly spot the new husband by his restless pacing, eternal watch-consulting and general air of uneasiness while he is waiting for breakfast and his wife is making her morning toilet.

"I think new clothes take an extra long time to get into, and frequently little tiffs arise because she takes half an hour (more or less) to put on her hat and arrange her veil, or because she changes her frocks an unnecessary number of times in a day. New men complain of the quantity of luggage taken on a honeymoon; that comes later.

"Some young brides exasperate their husbands by refusing to eat. They toy with their food and say 'No' to half the courses, thinking it 'unromantic' to be hungry.

"Then there is a type of woman who wants her husband with her morning, noon and night. He wishes to go off golfing or fishing or sight-seeing by himself for three or four hours a day. If he does, she thinks him unkind and selfish, and unless he consents to remain chained to her side, there is unpleasantness.

"What are the husband's rights in such cases? Have some?

"Indeed they have, and they are usually on a larger scale.

"As a rule, a man does not fret on his honeymoon, though occasionally I have known of very unhappy 'honeys' being caused by a bridegroom paying undue attention to other ladies in the hotel.

"A very well-known gentleman was in the midst of his honeymoon, when he was summoned to appear at court as the defendant in a breach of promise suit—one even as a correspondent in a divorce case; but such occasions are very rare.

"Sometimes a remarried widower will make conversations between his new wife and his 'late lamented' before the honeymoon has begun to wane, and I have heard a bride say, 'If I had married ——, he would never have behaved so.' Or 'I do wish mother were here.' But, as a general rule, 'honeymoon tiffs' are very trivial things, and serve as an excuse for pretty makings up.'

"Speaking in my professional capacity, I certainly hope that honeymoons are not going out of fashion. A bridegroom is almost invariably a generous man. He orders the best rooms and the best wines. He rarely complains of the food or service, gives good tips on departing, and, if the marriage is happy, frequently returns for a few days with his wife to renew acquaintance with the hotel where he spent the honeymoon."

How the Reckless Life That Centres Where the White Lights Gleam Along Upper Broadway, New York, Consumed the Fortune of Stewart M. Brice and Left Him a Mental Wreck.

"His Face Was Almost Entirely Devoid of Expression. The Eyes Were Blank, Seeming to Stare Into the Past Upon Scenes of Gay Triumphs Under the White Lights—Scenes Filled with Alluring Feminine Faces."

Upper Broadway, New York City, the centre of high-priced gayety on this continent, is not especially dangerous to those who indulge moderately in its fascinations. But it is on record that every young man or young woman who has attempted to throw the Gay White Way into eclipse by their own dominant and superior gayety—in other words, to "burn up the Gay White Way"—has come to grief.

The list of these victims of their own reckless enthusiasm is too long to particularize here. The latest instance—and one of the saddest—is a sufficient object lesson.

It was barely ten years ago that this youth, favorite son of a millionaire United States Senator, protégé of Robert Sandoval, a fashionable graduate of Harvard University, began a post-graduate course of globe-trotting. Soon in his self-imposed task of further reducing the Gay White Way.

Very few had been better equipped physically and financially to keep those white lights turning and burning. But it was a case of "many a slip" between cup and lip. Year after year the legion of society friends of Mr. Brice's class as veterans fell to rise no more.

Today the glare of the Gay White Way is as fresh and strong as ever, pulsating with young blood, animated by new faces. But where a that young champion who challenged it single-handed so enthusiastically?

Only a few days ago he was still [illegible] that confronted him in the [illegible] grand jury room. [illegible] appointed [illegible] was useless to [illegible] dressed, well-groomed young man who, until a year or two ago, was a familiar figure at the clubs, the opera, the races and all those places where the white lights burn brightest.

One searching glance at his face revealed the change—explained why he answered few of the questions addressed to him, why he was probably wholly ignorant of the meaning of his present situation.

His face was almost entirely devoid of expression. The eyes were blank, seeming to stare into the distance—into the past upon scenes of gay triumphs under the white lights—scenes filled with alluring feminine faces, among which persons him now to the exclusion of all other memories and associations.

The question members could come to but one conclusion. Stewart M. Brice was hopelessly insane. The Supreme Court must appoint a committee to care for his person and the small part of his estate that he has not squandered.

The once princely income of the favorite son of United States Senator Calvin S. Brice had dwindled to a paltry $3,500 a year, on the testimony of his brothers, who, with his sisters, had appealed to the court for a guardian commission. Out of their own resources they had increased this amount to $500 a month, which the old habits still persisted in without the possession of the means to gratify them.

Was this reversion to the old habits a sufficient reason for the total wreck of Stewart M. Brice's mental faculties? Or was there a subtler reason, a more powerful influence, which had overthrown his reason?

All this was in the testimony, and Stewart M. Brice, sitting there day in and day out, his vacant eyes telling of alluring visions of the Gay White Way, comprehended not a word of it.

[illegible] physical [illegible] seem to [illegible] Mr. Brice [illegible] Way [illegible] of the [illegible] cal Manager [illegible] ding and [illegible] Amid the [illegible] Manager [illegible] gaily recalled [illegible] destination of [illegible] a passenger [illegible] Way [illegible] "to [illegible] at Mr. Brice [illegible] after the [illegible] went with [illegible] Bullingham's [illegible] went with the [illegible] Mr. Brice was [illegible] that every [illegible] block was [illegible] When [illegible] alone at [illegible] for some [illegible] morning [illegible] to work [illegible] Gay White Way. Captain Brice was no ex[illegible] and [illegible] soon, and the hauls got him into [illegible] with a detail [illegible] at police stations. Upon one such occasion the time had flown so fast that [illegible] that there was noth[illegible] imagined he had been brought directly to the station from the Democratic club. He was willing to pay fifty cents, but declared $4.50 was extortion. Even the sergeant could not convince him he already had dollars "blood money" in [illegible] and went away assuring him solemnly that he would consider his [illegible] Captain Brice, being a member of the [illegible] dance committee.

As a member of the New York city council, young Mr. Brice very nearly got himself into Ludlow Street Jail for contempt of court in connection with a bond issue. At a dinner of councilmen he [illegible] created much excitement and some applause by an [illegible] on Richard Croker, through whose influence he entered politics in his speech he said:

There is a [illegible] cottage in England, surrounded by a moat, and in it lives a man who thinks he can put his ear to the ground and hear what is going on here. We don't have to. The people of Dublin a mile [illegible] enough to satisfy the gentleman, and we'll send him there to remain the rest of his life.

"I've been talking for the last three years about the way things were going wrong in Tammany Hall and against the crowd that is in control. I wasn't heard, but there are more with me now, and we will be heard, and the men responsible for the ticket which [illegible] ed the fall of our friends Oakley and Goodwin will fall with that ticket and the honest and decent men in Tammany Hall will prevail and we'll nominate and elect a ticket which will carry them on to honor and victory two years from [illegible].

How the kind of [illegible] by these typical episodes could so quickly swallow up a big fortune is understood by all who [illegible] it. A fall in [illegible] and [illegible] real difficulty that again nearly got Captain Brice into Ludlow Street Jail.

He was sued by a [illegible] firm of haberdashers to recover $2,000 for shirts, pajamas, neckties, etc. The matter reached the stage of supplementary proceedings. Mr. Brice neglected to appear, which was contempt of court. The matter was settled, but the point is that $2,000 on one account for these small details of a man's wardrobe gives the ultimate [illegible] wide [illegible] in figuring on the total annual expenses of their wearer.

What Certain Dreams Signify.

MOST persons, whether superstitious or not, have curiosity about their dreams—whether any such dance is to be attached to them. Here are some popular theories of the omens contained in certain dreams which nearly everybody has:

Flying—To dream you are flying is a very excellent omen. It foretells success of fortune. It also indicates that you will take a long journey, which will turn out advantageous to you.

Injury—To dream you receive an injury signifies that you have many friends and no enemies. If you dream of inflicting an injury you will both receive and dispense blessings.

Jockey—If a girl dreams she sees a jockey riding at full speed she will have an offer of marriage made her very unexpectedly.

It is during those two hours that the real life, under the white lights, where the champagne corks pop.

Stewart M. Brices are publicly on view, he being turned up in the blaze of the Gay White Way. The preliminaries and after math of this auto da fe can be read between the lines of the scenes described.

Miss Josie de Witt, exceedingly pretty and a violinist "headliner" on a vaudeville programme, was supping after the theatre with an old friend in the theatrical profession—Mr. Joseph Kenney. She was the most attractive figure in the dining room, crowded with supper parties. It was one of the show places of the Gay White Way which its heroes and heroines could not ignore.

Presently entered young Mr. Brice—after a round of other show places. Naturally he was more jovial than discreet. He sat down beside Miss De Witt and, according to Gay White Way custom, proceeded to order popping of champagne corks. He also admired Miss De Witt to an extent that annoyed her. It was useless for Mr. Kenney to remonstrate with him. Miss De Witt was at length constrained to remark with emphasis:

"I suppose you think that because you are the son of a great man and a millionaire you have a right to insult a poor girl who makes her living on the stage."

The printed records quote Mr. Brice as replying that:

Fortunately that friend remained calm and cool enough to conduct young Mr. Brice, without a scene, into the outer and cooler atmosphere.

This and other scenes described here occurred, of course, prior to the marriage of Stewart M. Brice to Mrs. Catherine Mount, by proposing that the City Hall flag be

Some time prior to that marriage Mr. Brice family were reported to be fearful that young Stewart would allow himself to be coaxed or led to the marriage altar by Miss [illegible] Robinson, the show beauty of many [illegible] who was [illegible] to girls and di[illegible] Four Hundred.

Those fears were accentuated at the leading out of the fact that young Brice was the host at a merry outing in Madison Square Garden, at which Miss Robinson was conspicuous, though other ladies present were such stage beauties as Adele Ritchie, Sylvia Thorne, Rosie Carroll and Pat Rooney.

For other [illegible] of the demi-monde society circles in which the Brices moved very much there were persistent rumors that Miss Robinson was about to become Mrs. Brice. But while that announcement was awaited with mingled interest and dismay, Miss Robinson was suddenly off to Europe, while young Mr. Brice remained on this side. Then the news was that not only the lady's passage but the means of an extended European sojourn were provided by members of the Brice family.

A Christian Experience With the Theatre.

(From The Watchman.)

To the Editor of the Watchman

I WANT to tell you, for your recent editorial upon "The Christian and the Theatre." Your attendance was apparently genuine and I believe above ordinary reproach. Many of our young people are constant and serious study of the theatre question, and have given much time and thought to investigation. I myself have arrived at a decisive conclusion. My experience may be helpful to others. I have been an ardent and inveterate theatre-goer, but for the past year I have not been to the theatre in my home city. I have also claimed that the "New Movement" had a right to exist. It may be of service to others if I state briefly the reasons which have led me to change my mind.

During my whole life I have, upon principle, shunned the theatre as an evil resort. In my college days at Harvard many years ago I attended it occasionally, but never without a feeling of condemnation. Since I have been in the ministry I have not entered one of the [illegible]

The Deserted Princess as She Appears as a Paris Cafe Singer.

THINK of a Princess being compelled to sing for her living! And on the great stage, a prize for a throne and dollars reward in the cafes of Paris for warbling!

But that is the fate which has befallen the Princess de Broglie, born Caroline Bonaparte Bonaparte, by her princely husband, has reduced herself.

As she is without resources, no money in the family, she must find some means of support. She has a voice of an exceptional quality and a charming personality, and she has decided to go on the operatic stage. Whether she will be successful or not is a question. Many a poorly paid singer and hidden in the Paris cafes.

Some of her smart society friends heard her sing lullabies to her little daughter, Princess Jeanmonde Seligmonde Estelle de Broglie, and aided her in securing engagements to sing for money at private houses.

This experience did not keep the little family long together, but it gave the Princess courage to face indifferent, rude or patronizing audiences later in the Paris cafes.

The Prince at length deserted her to be taken back into the bosom of his family. There is little doubt that this was a sort of plot, on the strength of the family belief that the American wife would sue for divorce on the ground of desertion—and that belief has proved correct.

The divorce proceedings are now pending in France. While the Princess is keeping the wolf from her door by singing to common persons while they eat their dinners, the Prince is coddled in the bosom of his noble family ready for his third love affair of the matrimonial kind.

Secrets of those Wonderful Strong Men Tricks.

Glass Links in Chains, Card Packs Already Torn Nearly Apart, Lifting Harnesses with Levers in Them, Help Fool the Audience.

By Prof. Henry Lacreuse, Professional Strong Man.

THE tricks that are performed by professional strong men on the stage are not really tests of strength, such as they appear to be.

There are [illegible] the feats which a man [illegible] from with his own muscles, however strong, would not [illegible] the public seen upon the stage. They will [illegible] marvelous and they get it.

When you see the strong man lift a horse and wagon [illegible] that he is not [illegible] aided strength. The same is true when he bites poker in two or twists up coins in his fingers.

I know what I am talking about, for I have done all these things myself. I am inclined to believe that all strong men of the time of Hercules have been fakers. They are obliged in fact, to be.

If the audience knew how simple are the most remarkable feats of muscular strength on the stage, the public would be cold and unresponsive. But as soon as he tears up packs of cards with his fingers and performs other impossible feats they burst into applause.

You can easily see by studying the athletic records that the feats on the stage are impossible. The record for lifting the bar dumbbell is 340 pounds, but no audience would be satisfied with a stage strong man unless he could put an apparent weight of 2,000 pounds above his head. Sometimes the people are invited to examine the weights, but the handles are greased for their benefit, and a great part of iron inserted inside the handle.

As to tearing the pack of cards, the strong man before the performance tears each card three-quarters of the way across. He puts one perfect card at the top of the pack and one at the bottom. Then he offers them for inspection without letting go of them, and tears them up without difficulty.

It would be impossible for any man to break a roll of any small copper or nickel coin with his fingers, but the effect is easily accomplished by a trick. Several coins are prepared in advance. They are rolled in powerful pliers backward and forward until they are on the point of breaking. The strong man asks some of the spectators to lend him coins. They can be relied on to offer only coins of the smallest denomination, and for these he substitutes the prepared coins, which he can break with ease.

In order to make this trick more realistic, many athletes carry little capsules of red fluid, called "blood," which they crush in their fingers as they break the coin, thus creating the impression that the tremendous effort has drawn blood.

A favorite trick of the strong man is to crush a champagne bottle between his forearm and the biceps of his upper arm. This feat is especially effective if, for a dress coat instead of the usual one, some garment that the strong man loves. The bottle is prepared by scratching a line in it with a diamond. Over this the label is pasted. Now, the arm and fore hand is placed, using a sharp pole in the. The strong man makes this point enter the hole in the bottle. He puffs out his cheeks, grows purple in the face, and "Crash" the bottle flies to pieces.

Then there is the trick of breaking a steel chain by the expansion of the chest. The explanation of this trick, which is two links made of a peculiar kind of glass, and these break in a very slight pressure. The chain then falls to the ground in two pieces, with a loud rattle of noise.

One of the most popular performances is that in which the strong man [illegible] up in a cage formed of [illegible] are arranged a considerable distance apart, [illegible] not far enough to enable a man to pass out. THE MAN WHO STOLE THE EARTH

Most Thrilling Novel of Love and Adventure Since Jules Verne's Masterpiece.

By W. Holt White.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

While the King of Pallas-known as Mr. Montgomery Jones-is spending a week on the Thames, near London, he meets and falls madly in love with a beautiful young retired music hall actress, Miss Dora Strong, who is living in a neighboring cottage with her daughter, Princess Diana. At Strong's suggestion Jones takes the latter to London, but Lohengrin, in perfecting a wonderful flying machine and a system of wireless telegraphy made available to any one who can afford it, has rendered mechanical warfare practically impossible. Strong tells the King that Lohengrin has also invented a terrible explosive, which he has made available to any one who can afford it, but has refused to sell it to any nation that would employ it for warlike purposes

HER BARBARIC GLARE OF JEWELRY,

by MRS. CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER.

Watch Rings, Worn Outside the Glove.

A Revolving Diamond Sunburst, Wound By Clockwork, a Golden Devil Fish With Moving Legs, and Garter Buckles of Golden Butterflies, Diamond-Set, Are Some of the Novelties in Jewelry.

THE devilfish is the work of one of the greatest designers in jewels, and has for a body a huge oval of onyx surface. And as a lover he was wanted. It is backed with sapphires, which, as everyone knows, is a much more valuable stone. But in these days, anything to gain results. The legs or tentacles are of very heavy gold, and flexible, so that they move and wriggle as the wearer moves. Hard as a pretty ornament one would imagine, it [illegible]

[illegible] is concealed some minute machinery which caused it a row of points to revolve a row over the other, making a truly dazzling effect. Wound up, the contrivance will evening and never grows weary. I suppose revolving suits buttons and crown-like tiaras which always wait around the wearer's head with be next in order.

Speaking of tiaras, of course, you know that this season the woman of society might as well appear at a function without her stockings as without her tiara. It's quite a fashionable excuse now when one arrives late at dinner to explain to one's waiting hostess: "So sorry, but my maid mislaid my best tiara and, of course, dear Mrs.
